Simon 1: Hello, have you developed any magical powers, recently?

Simon 2: It's funny you say that, because for a while I thought I was getting somewhere…

Simon 1: Forget to take your meds?

Simon 2: No, even better.

Simon 1: Go on.

Simon 2: You know how your body produces electricity?

Simon 1: Uh-huh?

Simon 2: Maybe that's what pins and needles are…

Simon 1: Ok…

Simon 2: No, really. 'Time to do some Googling', I thought to myself.

Simon 1: What did the internet say?

Simon 2: It's NOT caused by electricity.

Simon 1: Damn.

Simon 2: Yes, it's just that if they were, surely I could find a way of harnessing that power and shocking other people.

Simon 1: You'd be like Raiden from Mortal Kombat…

Simon 2: Yes, but how exactly?

Simon 1: The next time you get pins and needles, you could just prod someone with your fingers…

Simon 2: Yes, but how do I FIRE electricity?

Simon 1: Simon, I have no idea.

Simon 2: If I was in a desperate situation, I could chop my arm off, letting the electricity fly into someone else. Again, it must be a last resort.

Simon 1: That would be absolutely insane.

Simon 2: You say that, but there is a Dethklok song that is at least KIND of similar to that idea, it's called 'Bloodrocuted.'

Simon 1: Simon, do you remember talking about pins and needles before, and releasing them in a ball of energy, like a Street Fighter ‘Hadoken’?

Simon 2: Oh yeah.

Simon 1: So maybe drop the idea and move onto a topic you haven’t discussed before?

Simon 2: Street Fighter and Mortal Kombat are two different games.

Simon 1: Fair point. Chopping your own arm off IS more Mortal Kombat than Street Fighter.

Simon 2: Yeah, it’s more Broadmoor than anything else, though.

Simon 1: Why DO you keep talking about pins and needles?

Simon 2: I sleep on my arm.

Simon 1: Ah.

Simon 2: I try not to, though. For the last 6 years, I’ve been trying to sleep on my back so I don’t dribble as much and whilst I can get to sleep lying that way easily enough, staying that way the whole night is a different story. I’ve only managed to do it 3 or 4 times! Therefore, it’s harder than learning to read, in a way making me bi-lingual!

Simon 1: Simon’s bedroom language.

Simon 2: No, that makes me sound like a perv.

Simon 1: Yes, I’ll move on. Is sleeping on your back really the biggest way you’ve ever grown as a person?

Simon 2: It probably would be if I could really master the skill.

Simon 1: Wow.

Simon 2: No that sounded really self-centred and uncaring, what I meant to say is it’s super hard.

Simon 1: Ok.

Simon 2: Oh no, in that last sentence I didn’t capitalise the ‘I’ at first, grammar checker pointed that out for me…

Simon 1: That suggests learning to read is REALLY hard for you…

Simon 2: Yes, it really puts into perspective how hard it is sleeping on your back!

Simon 1: And therefore we can conclude that you growing as a person whilst you sleep that way is more impressive than I first realised.

Simon 2: And of course I don't really need to put any effort into self-improvement in the more traditional 'be friendly to other people way' because Clozapine helps with my mental health very well.

Simon 1: And it's not you shifting responsibility?

Simon 2: Well it is in a way, that's what makes the drug so powerful.

Simon 1: Should other people who don't get along with others take Clozapine, then?

Simon 2: Maybe. Maybe it will just make them need more sleep…

Simon 1: Ah.

Simon 2: Either that or lower their white blood count, if things go badly. You never know though, by pure chance an annoying person I decide to give Clozapine to could have been hearing voices all that time and just like that? He's cured!

Simon 1: Do you have any pharmacy qualifications?

Simon 2: No…

Simon 1: Oh thank God.

Simon 2: Why?

Simon 1: Because what are the odds of finding someone to give Clozapine to having schizophrenia?

Simon 2: It has been noted that those kinds of people are drawn to me, they often follow me around.

Simon 1: I see. Would you like to change the subject?

Simon 2: Yes, did you know that the letters seem to be in a random order on computer keyboards because they copied old typewriters? And the letters THERE were in that order so common letter pairings were reduced, making it less likely the typewriter would get jammed by writers?

Simon 1: Yes?

Simon 2: What if you wanted to type 'Fred, Fred, Fred, Fred' all over again?

Simon 1: And why would anyone want to do that?

Simon 2: He or she really liked Fred?

Simon 1: Well, the typewriter would get stuck.

Simon 2: Not so clever now, is it?

Simon 1: And would you think a novel only featuring the word ‘Fred’ would be popular?

Simon 2: Fred would like it.

Simon 1: No, Fred would find it creepy and annoying. Unless he’s creepy and annoying as well.

Simon 2: Typewriters would also get stuck if someone wrote ‘sassy’ over and over again.

Simon 1: Or sassy Fred.

Simon 2: ‘Sassy Fred’ by Simon Wiedemann. A minimalist masterpiece, dedicated to great guy, Fred.

Simon 1: That’s a new character for you!

Simon 2: Yes! What’s his MBTI type, I wonder?

Simon 1: What type is most annoying?

Simon 2: A question for Google!

Simon 1: Well?

Simon 2: It says ESFJs because they can be controlling, but don’t be sad ESFJs, every single MBTI was listed, just for different reasons. Google clearly doesn’t like introverted people as it called them ‘aloof’ and ‘stubborn’. :(

Simon 1: Can you pick one type for Sassy Fred?

Simon 2: ESFJ.

Simon 1: When is he going to make your site’s debut?

Simon 2: Probably pretty soon. It’s probably for the best if Sassy Fred and Charlie Baldwin don’t spend too much time together or that could try out-dominating each other.

Simon 1: As Charlie is an ENFP, maybe Google to see how the two types interact with each other?

Simon 2: Apparently they often like each other but ESFJs can be annoyed by an ENFPs’ lack of planning…

Simon 1: Plot twist: Charlie can’t make his mind up and Sassy Fred hits him.

Simon 2: Something like that, yeah.

Simon 1: Brilliant, this interview started off really stupid and irrational with talk about you ‘bloodructing’ people in perilous situations and you finished with a potential new take on your Christmas special!

Simon 2: My site’s ten-year anniversary will be on the 1st of February, 2027 as well.

Simon 1: And you don’t want sassy Fred spoiling everything?

Simon 2: Unless he does so in a way that’s entertaining.

Simon 1: Great, is that all you have to say?

Simon 2: Yes, bye!
