Here's a thought: What kind of person razes money 'for good causes'? I get some people think money is the root of all evil, but surely that's no excuse to burn it. And how can money be evil if it helps needy people? I simply can't believe masses of people have said things like 'countless millions are hungry in Africa and we all need to pull together and do something about it! And that of course isn't to pay for food, drinks, shelters and medicine but to… and I know this sounds strange at first but bear with me… to burn what can end up paying for such things! Think outside the box.' Oh I am so sorry, this has been a complete misunderstanding! Raze doesn't meant 'to set fire to' as I previously thought, it actually means to 'completely destroy'. I'm so embarrassed! Hang on… that doesn't make things better at all… If anything blowing money up with TNT is worse as at least fires warm people up and needy people DO need warmth. Not so much in Africa, but needy people in Norway, for example. They must have lots of needy people there, otherwise why are they associated with one of the most miserable forms of music of all time? That being raw 90s black metal. Listen to such music and then tell me the country doesn't need mental help. The clue's in the lyrics, for God's sake.

And think of all the shrapnel going everywhere when blowing money up. Look me in the eyes and tell me that's for good causes. It may well be a spectacle, but such an event pales in comparison to blowing up an unused skyscraper with TNT. I can't see how that would help either, but it would at least be cool. As in 'look at this Africa, we're about to blow up a huge building for you!' It IS something, blowing up money in front of poor people on the other hand is a huge insult. Oh I am so sorry, again! The phrase isn't RAZE money but RAISE it… Hang on… How does lifting money high into the sky help anyone? Another spectacle for you, but ultimately pointless. Sure raising money doesn't destroy it like razing it does, but lifting it can't be considered a good thing to do, it just can't. I'm imagining bodybuilders lifting up huge stacks of cash that weigh over 100 kgs. Impressive technically speaking, but Africa would just be like 'Good for you.' A bad reaction obviously, but think what other people would think of a bodybuilder lifting stacks of cash for no good cause (to show off, basically). That's a person who's going to alienate a lot of people.

Maybe I've misunderstood things again and it's actually RAYS money for charity. It is of course impossible to know for sure as the words raze, raise, and rays sound exactly the same. Destroy, lift and lasers. Do those three words sound related to you in anyway whatsoever? Because whilst I am English I don't understand the logic. Anyway, what does 'rays money for charity' actually mean? Shine lasers on it, of course! Why? Another spectacle, I guess. And you know what, lasers are impressive! Fancy a beam of light travelling a mile or so without it spreading out. Again, I'm not sure how that will help with FAMINE, but I guess rays can heat you up just a little bit. Oh yes of course, it's not Africa but Norway that needs warming up. Still though, lasers for Norway at least. Or even better jackets and firewood. To conclude, leave money alone! Destroying money is a crime for a reason, it's really, really stupid. If you're the kind of person to lift money up just to show off, that should be a crime too. You better be grateful that you live in a free country such as England, as anywhere else, you would get banned from the gym and get labelled an idiot. And on that troubling note… Bye!