

Hello, I hope you are well. This time I would like to apologise Van Halen's bassist, Michael Anthony. Not long ago, I implied he and ancient Roman Mark Anthony were the same people. I'm sorry to Michael for suggesting he has the secret to everlasting life and I'm sorry for suggesting he was too much of a self-important narcissist to tell anyone about the secret. Oh he has to feel special doesn't he, by living infinitely more than everyone? Or maybe he just likes watching everyone die with a smug smile on his face? No. To be clear, that was a mistake. A huge one. I'm also sorry for implying the bassist was a supporter of brutal tyrant Julius Caesar. He may have died around two thousand years ago, but that doesn't make his crimes less severe. I might have well have said the bassist was friends with Robert Mugabe. Even worse, the recent dictator wasn't even known for being musical. To be fair though, Julius apparently used a trumpet in battle. Could he shred on it or play funky riffs, though? Probably not.

I also explained how Michael was completely inactive for two thousand years, the time between the death of Caesar and the forming of the hard rock band. That would make him by far the laziest person on the planet. On the plus side, a very clever man not attracting attention for so long during that time. A lesser man would have ended up being known as the weirdest person in history. I'm wondering why the bassist has only started aging recently, though. Maybe he does it on purpose as he knows he can't get away with staying young anymore. With all the CCTV and all. Oh no. I need to apologise again. Sorry for saying you've been controlling your appearance to avoid attention. Oh, so you were friends with an evil tyrant, you let people die because for some reason you can't admit who you are to others, you're EXTREMELY lazy, and now shifty, too? Wow.

As Mark Anthony and Michael Anthony don't look like each other, I also implied the bassist must have performed plastic surgery on himself. It is impressive, just not the actions of someone who is honest. So yea, another apology. Furthermore, I've just found out Michael Anthony's full name is Michael Anthony Sobolewski, further distancing him from Caesar. So there you go. He wasn't called Julius Caesar Sobolewski, was he? The ruler doesn't have anything in common with any of the band members, in fact. Similarly, he wasn't called Julius Caesar Lee Roth, Julius Caesar Hagar, Julius Caesar Cherone, or Julius Caesar Van Halen. However, as I'm not an expert in languages, the latter at least kind of sounds plausible to me. I'll tell you what isn't plausible: Julius Caesar MacDonald!

Have you actually looked at a sculpture of Caesar? He has mad eyes, doesn't he? So did many Romans, is that because of mass lead poisoning or something? If so, imagine a whole population of mad people. Imagine a country where everyone is like me. Doesn't bear thinking about, does it? What rules would someone like me make up? Hm. I like chocolate, so the law should be everyone should turn their houses into chocolate so I can eat them. Sounds crazy? You wouldn't believe what it's possible for crazy people to think. Caesar is remembered for being an awful person, I get remembered for saying houses should be made from chocolate and I get to eat them. It's my own fault, really. It's not all doom and gloom for Michael though, as Caesar was a successful ruler a lot of the time and in some ways, at least. I'm sure if Michael was a leader, he wouldn't tell the population to drink from pipes made from a poisonous metal. A seemingly small improvement over Caesar, but at the same time, not really, Pretty big, pretty big. Right apology over, bye!