

Time to review more random words! This time there will be 15! A rounder number than 14, but not as round as 20, apparently. There is logic to that, but really I want the decision to be mine. Luckily with language I get to decide sentence structure, etc. I don't really get to decide what makes sense, I do have to follow some rules, and whilst anarchists claim they want complete disorder, if that were true, how would they read? Because in theory, they'd want to read things like 'nknmktrkmlfdmkltrfd4esfds5'. Get your thinking cap on, anarchists. Right, intro over, let's go!

15th: Danger

Last place? A bit unsurprising, this one. Some people like danger, like flying fighters jets, but who thinks going bare foot in the countryside in an area full of ticks is exciting?? Different types of danger, I guess. I like neither. Imagine flying a jet with ticks in it! How that would happen, I don't know. No, no, after doing some Googling, there is a video of a farmer flying such a plane! Scary stuff.

14th: Cousin

I don't really like my cousins too much. Sorry cousins, but I promise not to skip random words the generator comes up with, and to be honest, yeah, I'm in an unavoidable position and you haven't done well. I like you more the Lyme disease, though.

13th: Decay

Apparently it's good if McDonald's burgers decay, as it makes them easier to digest or something. When I watched the video about such burgers not rotting and how terrible it was I was just thinking to myself 'Oh nooo... McDonald's burgers don't rot! Someone has been overprotected and hasn't learnt how to deal with life.' In the end I understood the video. However, the main reason I haven't eaten such food in such a long time is because I had a nightmare where I ate a bad fast food burger, and since then I haven't recovered. True story. Anyway, it's bad when most things decay.

12th: Bee

I don't really like bees, but I sure do like writing about them. Well I did in the past, I've been thinking about them for half an hour or so for this monologue, and I don't know what to say. (Other than this). I guess a simple 'thank you, bees' will do.

11th: Reduce

Reducing danger would be good I guess, as would reducing bees. I wouldn't want to reduce bee jokes though obviously, expect many more, just not right now. I read that Caramac chocolate bars will be discontinued (an extreme form of reduction) as sales are low. Very sad. If it makes company Nestle feel any better, I've bought at least 20 of the treats. I must have given the CEO at least £1. Use it how you wish.

10th: Remark

A very important word for me and my various writings. Some remarks are better than others. When hearing about the Caramacs, I remarked 'No, you don't know what you're doing!' but when I heard the remark 'Toblerones will be around forever' (it was me who said it and I think I'm right) I was filled with joy. On the whole, a fairly neutral word.

9th: Dialogue

Like a remark, but a little more complicated and therefore more interesting. Dialogue is like a double remark, you could say. The double barrelled shotgun of the language world. Or it's like a buy one Caramac, get one free. Although maybe the company should go the other way and charge a fortune for the chocolates, considering how rare they are. Maybe I'll buy them as an investment, or maybe I'd appreciate the rarity whilst eating them!

8th: Concept

Getting more complicated, still. Again, there are good and bad concepts. There are even vague concepts like being given a Caramac. Am I getting it because many people think they don't taste very nice, or is to be considered an alternative to a fine whisky?

7th: Fox

Foxes don't really do any harm, I guess. If they were that great, they'd be sold as pets, though. I wonder why you don't get fox pets. They're kind of like a cross between dogs and independent cats. A cat dog sounds perfect, it's the best of both worlds. What I'd really love though, is a dog pigeon!

6th: Activate

I wouldn't want to activate danger, but who has ever said 'danger activate'? Ironically such a person would put himself in danger of being sectioned, before he has a chance to go super villain on people. On the other hand, I would like to activate fun times.

5th: Spin

Spinning around is fun! I haven't really done it since I was about 7, but maybe I should start doing again. Let loose and don't care what others think, and all that. Here's a thought: Why is it immature if I do that, but it's somehow cool if teenagers spin around in souped up cars? A genuine question.

4th: Steel

Perhaps the most sung about material in the whole of the heavy metal genre. It's either that or iron. And you can understand why. Durable and not prone as prone to rusting? I want to sing about it, too.

3rd: Run

I love running. I don't love it that much though, really I love the feeling when I stop running. Not a perfect form of exercise, but whilst drugs make you feel good (I'm told!) then bad, running is the exact opposite, the main difference being running is good for you. Weigh up the pros and cons and choose running over drugs.

2nd: Nominate

I'd love to be nominated for an award! What award that would be, I don't know. Biggest psychiatric disaster if you gave me the 'award' as a 15 year old, maybe. Having recovered pretty well, (not completely, let's be real) an impressive psychiatric success story award could go to me, now. I know that sounds a bit mad.

1st: Tablet

Tablets are SO important. Essential, even. So essential, the side effects are a non-issue for me. In fact I'd go even further and say I'm in love with tablets. They really are THAT good.

Right, not a list of words to be TOO excited about this time, but in terms of functionality, they were actually pretty good. This has also been a fairly healthy monologue, a bit dark with the bees, but yeah, on the whole, not too bad! Bye!