

James: Hello! With me on today's show are Nick and Henry, two once suspects of a murder!

Nick: I'm glad everything has cleared up.

James: Yeah. But not EVERYTHING.

(There is an awkward silence).

James: As Henry doesn't want to explain, I'll explain for him. Ok, here goes: There has been CCTV of him proving he was somewhere else at the time of Shawn's death, HOWEVER, it's also been proved he went on a very lengthy drugs binge.

Dominant Egg: It's ok. I did too.

James: Yes, and a leading film producer AND a weatherman went on the bender? A national scandal! Or should I say, they TRIED to go on a binge?

Henry: It's the last time I party with YOU, Charlie!

DE: I was forced to give the CCTV! How would I ever know the police would want footage from my house to use against me?? Who buys CCTV for that?!

James: Think of it as a blessing in disguise, Charlie. At least you won't abuse drugs again, am I right?

DE: Yes, I was actually saying the same thing at the party, CCTV proves it.

James: Your own CCTV. Thankfully no one will be getting into trouble though, as actually you weren't given real drugs, you were given a small bag of sugar. Similarly, it's not an offence to sell sugar to people, so the dealer won't be getting into trouble, either. He will however, be very much disliked by other party animals, desperate to give their lonely lives meaning.

DE: I have Wendy. Anyway, all things considered, I'm both relieved and annoyed.

James: Your fluffy puff, Wendy. Other CCTV footage suggests the murder was ordered by an egg and carried out by another egg.

Nick: I hope I don't sound close-minded when I say this, but eggs are very, very strange...

Henry: I was thinking the exact same thing.

James: You make a very good point, when was the last time, if ever where you saw a plain, normal, sane egg?

DE: Coming from you??

James: Yes, but my point is I can go to the shops and see people who are 100% sensible. I go to a shop run by eggs and it's nothing but a freak show.

(A phone rings)

Caller: It was me! I killed Shawn!

James: Are you the same person who phoned up last time?

Caller: Yeah!

James: No it wasn't you! Are you an egg?

Caller: No, I'm a pigeon.

James: Well there you go then, now don't phone this show again. Let's at least try and lighten the mood by talking about your upcoming film, Charlie. Is it good?

DE: The best.

James: It's certainly filled with action. I've actually seen the trailer and it has a surprising amount of depth to it. How did you make the film so quickly??

DE: I haven't, only the trailer has been made.

James: Ah.

(A phone rings)

Caller 2: Jake, here. I produced the film.

James: You also must be relieved you didn't take drugs after all...

Caller 2: No, all I had to do was brush my teeth afterwards.

James: And sugar is nice, too!

Caller 2: Yes. Not particularly healthy, but if there's better flavour enhancer for gummy bears, I haven't heard of it.

James: Do you eat gummy bears?

Caller 2: Hypothetically speaking.

James: I was going to say... Gummy bears and drugs? It does sound KINDA rock and roll but at the same time, it doesn't really sound... right...

Caller 2: Yes, it's not something Baribo would want to get involved with!

James: Yes, the slogan would have to be changed, as well.

Caller 2: Getting kids AND grownups into drugs?

James: Yep, I liked the brand before.

Caller 2: You're a wise man.

James: Thank you.

Caller 2: As you're so wise, would you like to promote my new film without mentioning drugs?

James: Watch Star Eggs. Don't do drugs.

Caller 2: Perfect. Thank you.

James: I should probably tell the other guests on my show not to do drugs, as well... Just to be really clear.

DE: Noted. And don't eat sugar on its own, either. It's very bland.

James: But sugar on strawberries is nice!

Caller 2: You have an excellent show, James. Film fanatics like it, so do anti-drugs campaigners, now chefs do, too.

James: The mentally ill population can't get enough of it!

Caller 2: There you go. Even better.

James: So we have fans of film tuning in, the police, chefs and crazy people. Everyone else though? Errr... not so much!

Caller 2: Brilliant. Bye.

James: Wonderful. Now what to talk about?

Nick: It's good to be free!

(A phone rings)

James: Hello?

Caller 3: I'm an egg and I killed Shawn. And I agree with Nick, it IS good to be free. I will never be caught!

James: But you're on CCTV...

Caller 3: Yes, but I was wearing sunglasses, making me untraceable.

James: Why do you wear sunglasses if you have no eyes, anyway?

Caller 3: I don't know...

James: So, you're calling a show to boast about your crimes, which I should point out, almost ALWAYS works out badly, and you can't answer basic questions. You're not exactly a master criminal, are you? Are you going to leave your name as well?

Caller 3: Leonardo Albasini.

James: Really?

Caller 3: Oh no.

James: Is that an Italian name?

Caller 3: You got me. I work for the mafia.

James: You need to hand yourself into the police, right now!

Caller 3: Good luck with that. I'm leaving the country as I speak. Good day.

Nick: I'm going to kill him, I'm going to kill him! After all the hell he has put me through!

Henry: Oh God, exactly!

James: Is it easy for eggs to board planes unnoticed?

Henry: It's possible he has his own private jet...

James: I guess it's also possible he could simply float across the sea, it's not going to take much effort, is it?

Henry: Argh!

James: If it's any help, intelligence suggests both eggs involved with the murder are 3 years old...

Nick: So look for an egg past its sell by date?

DE: What's that mean?

James: Oh not this again. It means nothing.

DE: Why did he say something that doesn't mean anything?

James: Well, he's on drugs, isn't he?

DE: No, he his given sugar... Just like me...

James: Yes, but he thought he was on drugs. He's performing his script as psychiatrists would say.

Henry: Saying the sugar was a placebo would work, too.

James: There you go, a double whammy.

(A phone rings)

Caller 3: Hello, it's Leonardo. I'm floating across the English Channel right now.
(expletive) you.

James: What did you say??

Caller 3: You heard. Arrivederci.

James: This egg must be stopped, right now! However, we're all out of time so bye!