

We all know the devil lives deep within the Earth in a fiery, lava filled Hell. The question is, why are the Russians trying to enter the underworld by digging the deepest tunnel ever? You think that's me being paranoid? Oh yeah? Well why does the same country have a nuclear missile they call 'Satan 2'? Those working on the project would be like 'We only dug this hole to be warm in the Winter, it's freezing here!' Ok, that makes sense. What do you call your hole, by the way? It's called the 'Kola Superdeep Borehole'? Ah Coca Cola (or Kola, as the Russians call it, apparently). You may not think of the drink as the devil, but I do. Again, I can't have caffeine, and if I do (expletive) gets real. If you're clever, you can twist things and claim the name of the hole is based on a koala bear maybe, but you simply can't justify the name of the missile. 'We only called the weapon that as a joke!' Then why is it designed to kill millions of people? If I wanted to do the devil's work, I would kill millions of people. Me calling a charity shop 'Satan 2' could be perceived as a joke on the other hand.

Google says the devil sows confusion. Yes, in that respect you can call ME the devil, but when I puzzle other's it's unintentional, I actually want to be perceived as intelligent. Is it really intelligent if someone digs a hole so deep, they get burned alive? And what's so clever about letting the devil out of Hell? Do the Russians think he will be grateful, say 'thanks' and then work with them? It's the devil! He would most likely just say 'screw you' and rule the world himself. That can't happen. The country is kinda stuck when it comes to naming the missile, though. Going in the opposite direction, would it be appropriate if they called it 'Jesus 2'? If anything, that's more offensive. I'm wondering what a nuke should be called. Hm. How about plain 'Nuke 2'? Though of course that is very uncreative. To make an analogy, say a family doesn't want to offend anyone by calling their baby son 'Satan' or 'God' and they simply call him 'Boy'. That's not good either.

It's not just Russia that has a problem, what's the point of America sending a spaceship to the sun? To study it? Well what do you want to know? How hot is it? Very! Maybe there is a misunderstanding and NASA think the devil lives there, instead. I've told you this before, you don't want to work with him! What's the pope supposed to think? Russia is digging for Satan, and America is flying there! Last year was the hottest on record for England and global warming is caused by mankind, further proof those in power want to work with the devil. As in 'let's make the world nice for him, then he can give us his powers'. Again, all that really would happen is the devil would just say 'lol' and again, poor pope. You can actually get into trouble for discussing controversial global warming theories on the internet, so when writing the prior I felt VERY nervous. You're not taking me seriously are you? I'm just putting the thought out there, not claiming it as fact. I would be screwed if I called those who don't agree with my ideas as 'sheeple'. But I won't and I didn't!!

Having said that, it's weird how I'm getting anxious talking about global warming and not by talking about the Russians or NASA. I guess I need to sort out my priorities. So sorry internet, Russia and NASA. What makes this apology different is for the very first time I genuinely mean it. My fingers are super crossed, but maybe the act of defeating writer's block was worth it. Ahem! Ok yeah, global warming being caused by the burning of fossil fuels and that having absolutely nothing to do with EVIL, but instead having more to do with the Earth's need of getting an efficient power source? Yeah, it makes total sense! Global warming is bad and is caused by fossil fuels, I've said it again. Having said THAT, I've never read a warning telling me not to claim global warming is designed to make Satan happier, so who knows, maybe I am in the clear? But just in case, that isn't what's happened. Bye!