

Just to add a little spice to my life, when I post my daily jokes on Twitter, I try to remember the order I place the hashtags 'lol' and 'joke' afterwards. It's a memory game, but the stakes are high in that all my followers see how I do. In a perfect world, I should write 'joke, lol' one day, then, 'lol, joke' the next, then 'joke, lol', 'lol', 'joke' etc. But we all make mistakes right? Let's find out how I do in this monologue, where I have recorded everything! I started the hobby way back in August of last year, so you'd think I'd get better at it? Again, let's find out!

Joke, Lol

Lol, Joke

Started well...

Ah. A mistake already.

Back in business.

Dammit.

Ok, let's lighten the mood with a hard to comprehend fact. And let's face it, this monologue could do with some spicing up. A lot of it is just a list of two words, or rather letters. I'm aware of that. Ok, I was Googling mangoes because I'd just eaten some and I was hoping to find out that they instantly made me healthier. The internet says mangoes are beneficial for colon cancer. So they help cancer or fight it? Not clear. A funny observation. Now let's get going again!

Woohoo!

1st of September. (Let's include the beginnings of the month just in case I get completely lost on my Twitter page and have to start listing the lols and jokes right from the start. Again. That was annoying).

A fantastic run, but all good things must come to an end. To celebrate, here are some more funny self-generated Youtube subtitles I read, as I listened to music in the background. Ever heard of guitarist Tosin Abasi? Well the subtitles think he should really be called Toast and a Bossy. Swings and roundabouts a bit, there. Lots of people like toast (I've never heard of a person who doesn't like it, but then again I never really ask), but being bossy? Not quite so good. Unless you're a boss of course, then it's great! :D

Not so good memory, there.

Oh this is ridiculous.

This is VERY hit and miss. Four mistakes in a row? Actually a healthy person would say it's worse than hit and miss. Let's face it, it's bad, possibly even abnormal. Let's lighten the mood with a funny story! My brother phoned me up to say he's had another baby (his wife has, I mean!!) and he said the mini person's name is Darcy. I said 'Darty?' and he said 'Yeah.' Nope, actually her name IS Darcy. Annoyingly the wrong name has stuck with me. To this day I still keep thinking of her as Darty. Hopefully that's not a lifelong thing. On the plus side, darty does have a nice meaning though. Daytime party? I think that's fun. Darcy on the other hand means 'Descendant of the dark.' :S It could also mean dark-haired which isn't so bad. I think it means that, in this case.

That was something I suppose.

Maybe not.

AAAARGH!!!!

Three mistakes in a row again!!!

1st of October. To celebrate the start of a new month, here's a funny story: I saw a police chase video titled 'police dog gets high speed pursuit suspect', but because I read the title quickly, for a couple of seconds it almost seemed like a dog could be the driver of his own special car! Very odd. Actually, the police dog chased the suspect on foot/paw after he left HIS car. Of course.

I'm seriously starting to wonder if this is normal, now...

Yeah... not too bad, not too bad. I mean... right? On second thoughts, I guess it was. Here's a thought: Why do websites I haven't visited in about 8 years and by accident come up in the website address bar? An example would be like I type in 'hot' wanting 'Hotmail', but instead I get 'Hot-wire-Anemometer-Mega-Deals-Cool.com' or whatever. I don't even know what a hot wire anemometer is! I had to Google it! Ok, back to business...

It's just I've hit my head pretty hard a couple of times...

L J

I must have hit it particularly hard... Anyway, does anyone really care who wins the world cup other than the winners? Not me. All that happens is that the losing team feels cheated, no? Having said that, I did watch the final and it was very exciting, everyone was saying it was the best match you could hope for. One guy even said he'd 'never seen anything like it'. Fine. But I forgot about the match after about 2 minutes, maybe. A German guy on Facebook said it was a good match too, but again, I'm assuming he forgot about it soon after posting. I remember who should have won though: England. If you're thinking I have particularly strong feelings about football, as I don't seem to have let the world cup go after all this time, actually I stored the above writing in my 'ideas' folder and have only just got around to posting. So don't be scared.

Am I getting worse?

Sadly I think I am. To lighten the mood, here's an observation: 99% of the time I skip the demo songs you sometimes get on the ends of albums, the other 1% I listen to them because I can't be bothered to skip them.

Yep, another hat trick. To celebrate, here's a good way to troll a psychology site: First you comment on a post discussing the Myers Briggs type of a famous celebrity, and you say 'Ah, a classic ENTP'. Then someone would be like 'That's an interesting theory, why do you think that?' Then you give an apparently random answer like 'because he relates to broken objects'. (Psychology website viewers may know that about half of people maybe relate to broken objects. That's just what the site said). Then you comment on another post and say 'Ah, a classic ENTP'. Then you'd get another intrigued response. And you keep posting the exact same comment for different celebrities over and over. Then people would be like 'Oh. I see what's going on here'. I hate to sound immature, but to me, that's funny and a cool thing to do.

Ok, not TOO much of a bad way to start the year. Just one error, woop. So, what have we learnt with this monologue? Basically, me guessing lol, joke or joke, lol randomly would have very similar results as me trying to remember what to say a lot of the time, BUT I do have my moments, that's for sure. Remember the times where it seemed like my winning streaks would go on forever? Focus on that stuff. Bye!
