

Sharks
by
Simon Wiedemann

© 2019

Why do some people/groups try so hard to stop sharks from going extinct? Why would anyone want to look after anything that can potentially kill people, in fact? Is it because sharks are rare and therefore interesting? Who finds ants as interesting as the fish, for example? If that's the case, sticking up for the sealife makes about as much sense as someone keeping the black death around. I mean it only kills a few people every year. Might as well keep it, right? The world just wouldn't be the same without it. 'But sharks are beautiful and amazing creatures, that's why we need to help them'. Personally I would call the bacteria that causes plague amazing. Ok, it may not be beautiful, but is beauty a way to judge what gets to live and what doesn't? I sure hope not.

Hang on... Now that I think of it, sharks AREN'T beautiful. Have you seen their teeth? They're sharp as knives. Do you know what kind of people sharpen their teeth? Psychopaths. Therefore we can conclude shark sympathisers are all dangerously mentally ill, too. Birds of a feather flock together. Therefore no one should really give the 'do-gooders' any attention. And what's beautiful about their cold black eyes? Only a fool would trust them/pat the animals on the head/feed them treats, etc. 'But beauty is on the inside...' I see. And what positive psychological traits do the killers have? Can you think of one? If you can (or rather think you can) off to the mental institution you go.

'What about keeping sharks in zoos where they can't hurt anyone?' I don't see why not. As long as people don't go surfing in the places, but I've never heard of that happening. I have heard of people falling into tiger cages, but if someone carried a surfboard and wore a wetsuit in the tourist attractions, I'm sure they would get approached and stopped immediately. Or maybe people would be too dumbfounded to stop them. If that's the case and they do indeed go surfing with sharks, that's just another reason why the animals need to be stopped. Unless you're saying sharks are more important than stupid people.

Am I suggesting all sharks, venomous snakes, poison arrow frogs, rampaging cows, evil sheep, immoral chickens and such should be KILLED? No. Imagine the resources that would need to go into a full-blown 'man Vs nature' war. More importantly, think how insane that war would be. Complete, worldwide, non-stop carnage and no one would have time to work. The whole world would come to a standstill. And what happens when everything is over? I'll tell you, everyone starves to death because there's nothing to eat. All started because of sharks. If you think the bloodshed would be bad for most people, how would vegetarians and vegans react? Perhaps a human carnivore Vs human herbivore war would follow. And that would basically be the end of the world.

In conclusion, screw sharks. But DON'T KILL THEM. (Unless they attack you of course, please remember that.

Please don't say 'Simon thinks you should let sharks eat you!
') Fine keep the things in aquariums where people can look at them without being harassed, I'm sure doing so will benefit the economy and the entertainment industry... . . . Or should you keep them? Having done some internet research, I've just discovered that the fish often refuse food when in captivity. To me that says they hate their situation so much, they go on hunger strike. So you could argue they don't really have a place anywhere. Just saying. Ok, that's all from me...
Byeeeeeee!