

I recently read a small article on Facebook listing all the ways to get back at people, and at the end of it, it said without a hint of irony that most battles aren't worth fighting. So what does it mean? Say someone told you that to be a success in life, you have to study as hard as possible and never stop working and then the same person told you not to worry as A.I. will do everything for you. Wouldn't that be odd? Not only that, he took the time to write that down in the form of a serious and an apparently inspirational email that for some reason wasn't possible to interact with, all you can do is comment on the post or like it. 'But I have so many questions!' Or how would you feel if someone told you to always drive safely, as if you don't you will crash and die or get sent to jail. But then again, cars are very safe nowadays, so it doesn't really matter? I get the feeling those three same claims could come from the same person. He really shouldn't be posting anything on the site as children are very impressionable. At least youngsters in Australia are free from such comments though, which is something. A once settlement for criminals now has people who are at least relatively logical! People say Andrew Tate is dangerous but at least he encourages hard work. I don't think he's ever said something massively contradictory like 'work hard and buy a supercar. But don't bother as money doesn't bring you happiness.' He can't have done otherwise, how would he get so many followers? Unless maybe the educational system has got really bad?

I've talked about mixed messages, now I'll talk about mixed feelings. I have to be honest, I heard a musician get into serious trouble with the law, (you can get an idea of how serious when I say he got 30 years in jail for the ATTEMPTED crime), but I checked his music out anyway and it was pretty good, so much so I bought the CD! However, I don't feel truly bad listening to it as technically no one got hurt. Upset maybe, but not injured. Sorry, I meant I won't feel bad WHEN I listen to it, as I haven't heard it yet, I'm checking it out later as a treat! What's the music like? Brutal death metal? No! I've heard two of the songs and they were kinda chilled out! I would say don't trust chilled out people because I think I've created enough paranoia already when I suggested everyone in the world apart from Australians believe in complete gibberish. You know what? I'm in support of the social media ban for children, not so much because the site is harmful but more because it's very easy to say something seriously stupid. It may shock you when I say this but as a child I was even more immature. You know what? I don't think I'm going to cause offence by telling you the album I bought, so why not end the mystery by telling you now? No, on second thoughts, as the musician hasn't actually been imprisoned yet, telling you could get me into some very serious trouble! :S What if he's innocent?? Dear God, no. I hope he is though, despite what I just said.

I'm wondering what mixed messages the mysterious band would come up with. 'Always play chill music but at the same time, break the law (allegedly)?' How is breaking the law chill? You could smoke various illegal products but would you really feel calm when the threat of arrest is always there? Like all rational people, I say no to drugs! It's really important for me though as I can't even have caffeine, not even a single sip!! If someone offered me anything even slightly stronger I would get a very extreme psychological reaction, that's for damn sure. Probably rage. I'm wondering if I have an allergy to caffeine? I mean I don't THINK I do, but if I do, I've been saying I have no allergies to doctors all these years! I'm worried about saying I have such an allergy in future as it would mean I've been apparently lying all this time, which never looks good to anyone, in particular psychiatric doctors. What else have I been lying about? That I don't still believe I control the world with my thoughts? I'd have to have an increase of medication meaning even more sleepy time, it would be annoying. Not only that, ruling the world is kinda fun... I suggest pizza for everyone! Kanye West once suggested everyone should get paid one million dollars for having a baby (I say he should stick to music and avoid politics, though I do understand his irrational thinking) and A.I. gave me a very interesting mini essay on what would happen in that situation, it wouldn't be good Kanye, it wouldn't be good... There would be one benefit though, that being people in debt would find it easy to pay everything off, which is something... And on that wise note... bye!