

Today, I'll be reviewing 'Scream, Aim, Fire' by Bullet for my Valentine! It's interesting how they're a Welsh band, but parts of the album were recorded in Texas, a state well known for people screaming, aiming and firing. Whether that's a coincidence, something that's supposed to be badass, or a joke, I don't know. If it makes Texans feel any better, the most common crime in the UK is fraud. How would I feel if someone pretended to be me and posted a load of weird stuff on my site? I'd be devastated because rather than people saying to themselves 'this site has been hacked' they'd just think 'Simon is just trying to be daring and it hasn't worked, what's he going to say next time? That he was given a larger portion of hash browns than he asked for, didn't pay the extra price and just walked away?' Well that's happened already! What would be fraudulently posted on my site, I don't know. Maybe 'I'm Simon, I've gone crazy (or more so ha) and have robbed my local supermarket whilst armed with a real gun, hahaha!' You'd believe I'd say something like that if I was desperate enough for material, wouldn't you? And that's ok. Anyway, my point is I wouldn't like someone screaming, aiming and firing at me, but fraud sucks, too! :) It would really suck being defrauded by someone with a gun, though. I'd still probably blog about that, maybe the title could be 'Worst day ever extreme'. However, I would never blog about robbing someone and then shooting them! Also, I wouldn't sing a song about that!

On a lighter note, a resident on my street has turned 100 today! No bullet for her obviously, I mean... why? Also, she's way too old to be my valentine, they would be very odd. What I certainly would NEVER do would be to ask her to be my valentine and then shoot her. I wouldn't even give her a bullet, which I could actually do as my dad has DISARMED(!) bullets, I think from a jet fighter's machine gun. If I did give her the bullet, that would be sending a very disturbing message, i.e. 'You can try and waddle away, but I'm supersonic and armed to the teeth. Only an exceptionally pessimistic person would ever think I'd blog about that situation. Happy birthday, though! I'm wondering how she'd celebrate it, as it's the roundest number possible! You have to make a big deal of that, don't you. I mean she's not going to live to what the Romans simply referred to as 'M', so yeah, you have to throw her the biggest party you can. If it was possible for people to live that long, fine, make an even bigger deal THAT birthday. Even my 37th birthday was pretty good, and that number is very forgettable. I suppose the kindest thing I could do to the OAP would be to simply leave her alone. Best present ever. If you think I'm weird online, I'm not any better in the real world. Oh yes, and my dad got her a gift just for being 100. A thoughtful thing to do - and I'm sorry for being cynical - but just because you're 100 years old, that doesn't actually mean you're a nice person. What if she's a murderer?

Moving on, apparently vehicle theft/tampering is the 5th most common offence in the UK. What's vehicle tampering? What, like sellotaping biscuits to a car to freak the owner out? THAT'S something I could do, but it's the fifth most common crime? I never knew I was so predictable!... I guess I'll have to try harder, maybe by sticking a child's drawing of a goldfish on a car? That would be weird... Best tampering ever. Let's Google what vehicle tampering really is... It can be the enhancement of your car? What, like putting jet boosters on them? That's cool! A lot cooler than the biscuit idea! I've never actually seen a car with a jet booster on it though, the internet is suggesting loads of people are modding their cars, that way. Wow, a country of people pretending to be me and then blasting down motorways, how empty do you have to feel to do that? Get a life! At least you know where you stand with someone aiming a gun at you, I wouldn't know what the hell to do if I saw some guy do the weird crimes just described. Maybe attach a jet pack to them and wave them goodbye, see how they like it. Now what do I think of the album? Yeah, I like it! It's easily my fave out of the three BFMV albums I own and I give it 9.25/10! Good news for the band but it does mean the person who ranked all the band's albums will have to redo things, as I disagree with his ordering. All things considered, do you really want to get on my bad side? And on the dark note... bye!