

Unless you live in a tribe, you are criminally insane, or both, you wear clothes. But have you thought about such things, or do you completely ignore them most of the time? If the latter, you can stop worrying as I've been thinking about clothes for a good few hours and have come up with some pretty compelling insights. Let's go!

First up, what are my thoughts on...

Socks??

Why do socks get holes in them so quickly? I don't have aggressive toes, do I? As far as I'm aware, they spend most of their time pretty still, unless I'm giving them a contented wriggle. A paranoid person may think the items of clothing are made extra thin so people need to buy more of them when they're damaged, but much of the time they're not thin! Are special sheep bred that have thick yet rubbish wool? I'm not sure if I've ever seen a sheep with rubbish wool. Smelly wool, but not weak.

Shoes

Only super toes of bodybuilders will ever cause holes in shoes. Unless of course, you've been seriously ripped off. Or maybe you like to buy shoes that are way too small. Interestingly, Aerosmith's Steven Tyler had an interest in tiny shoes, and now he has serious foot damage. So fight the temptation and buy the right size.

Shorts

I don't know why, but I've never really had an interest in shorts. I do however, wear shirts - the shorts version of jumpers. I guess what my knees look like will remain a mystery to others. Suave.

Trousers

I almost never wear shorts, so does that mean I almost always wear trousers? You bet it does, don't be scared. Clothes designers take note: Making trousers that have pockets without zips is totally pointless. Unless you're an ultra badass risk taker who can stand the thought of his keys and wallet being lost. Forever.

Boxer shorts

I usually don't have any problems with boxer shorts. I do however, have issues with the items of clothing that have undoable buttons on the front. First up, even if they actually worked, they'd be pointless, secondly, they ALWAYS come undone, meaning if some weirdo pulls your trousers down 'as a goof', you're more than likely going to expose yourself to someone. No!

Shirts

Unlike trousers or shorts, you don't HAVE to wear shirts. Still though, it's a good idea not to go semi-naked when driving a taxi, in job interviews, mental health evaluations, etc. Of course you can wear jumpers without shirts, but for whatever reason that's... well not a TABOO, but it is a bit weird. Who knows why?

Jumpers

Ahhh, nothing beats the snugness of a good jumper. (I'm going off topic a little, but the following words 'ah', 'ahh', 'ahhh', 'ahhhh', and 'ahhhhh' are real words according to my spellchecker, but 'ahhhhhh' isn't. It's too far, too many Hs. A bit weird, isn't it?) Anyway, snug jumpers: Again, I like zips with such clothes that go all the way down the front. They're not essential, but I like how the things make taking off the clothes that little bit quicker. Very nice.

Jackets

Sometimes I feel silly when wearing jackets, possibly because they're associated with potatoes. Either that, or because jackets make me look like I'm at least two stone heavier. Like I spend 8 hours at the gym every day. It's just not me. Now that I think of it, the latter reason is more likely, but potatoes do look comical, especially when given fake moustaches and eyes, for example. Great stuff.

Scarves

Wow. I haven't worn a scarf in such a long time, I'm not even sure if I've ever worn one. Needless to say I'm not much of a scarf person. Scarves with Iron Maiden jumpers? Very odd. In fact, odd dress sense is a symptom of schizotypal personality disorder. It's rare when choice of clothes alone suggests something's not 100% right with you. But of course wearing a jumper with '(expletive) off' on it, also hints at a mental health issue.

Hats

Again, you need to be careful choosing the right hat, as it's easy to look like a nutter. You have the freedom to wear a top hat if you really want to, but I wouldn't. You know how to REALLY look mental? Go to a job interview without a shirt AND whilst wearing such a hat.

Ok! So, if you've never felt the need to ponder on how to dress, I've just saved you a few hours or so. I know I may not come across as the most sensible person in the world, but I seriously recommend you take my advice. Or at least some of it. (You know what I mean). That's it! Monologue over! Bye!
