

At first the idea of the monologue 'Things I'm Indifferent To' sounded like a joke. Then I realised I've written about my favourite numbers and letters which few people in their right mind would care about, and then I thought 'no, maybe I can make it work'. To cut a long story short, I could say that I'm indifferent to everything, but that would only be true sometimes. Mainly after playing hated game Prince of Persia. (DOS) Oh for flip's sake! Anywho, let's go!

Tables

You know what? I don't really have strong feelings towards tables at all. They're useful, but they certainly don't make me happy or sad. 'But you could say that for all furniture'. Not true, I once owned a stool that kept collapsing at random moments for about four years. I really hated that, even though I like to think it built up my reflexes as I fell over in a variety of different ways. So yeah, tables are pretty meh, really. But I guess I like them more than I dislike them.

Grey

Not a bad colour. Not exactly anything to get excited about either, but people wearing it certainly don't look as strange as those wearing pink and green. Sure, some can pull off wearing such colours, but most people (e.g. undertakers, businessmen, pilots, etc.) can't.

Orange juice

I guess this is alright, not just in terms of taste, but health. It's very sugary which is bad, but it's not exactly like Coca Cola, especially in the days it had cocaine in it. :O Did you know German soldiers were on crystal meth? A very strange time to be alive. Even the colour is fairly average. A plain yellow? Make the drink multicoloured and that would be awesome. Actually, I'd really like to see any multicolour drink. Like the hats in Back to the Future 2, very cool!

Slugs

Trying not to step on them in the dark can be annoying, but at least they don't step on me. I actually once saved a slug's life, when my dog tried to eat one. Had it showed even the slightest bit of gratitude, maybe I'd have liked it more.

Bus drivers

I guess these people provide a valuable service, but I've never really connected with a bus driver, tbh. I hand them my money, they drive. They don't go crazy and run people over which is great in these Grand Theft Auto times, but they don't let me ride for free, either. They don't even say nice things. How hard is that?

Load, and Reload by Metallica

Not terrible albums, but mostly forgettable. If you combined the best songs of both albums and put them on just one, whilst throwing all the other tracks in the bin, you'd actually have a fairly decent LP, however.

Channel 5 (UK)

If you like watching people getting arrested and people who are almost about to die being operated on, this channel is for you, but it's not exactly stuff that's hard to make. Having said that, more respected channels have made some genuine crap. One such show that stands out is the one where people sell items to buyers, and THAT'S IT. I've talked about it before.

The letter 'N'

It looks similar to M, it's right next to the letter in the alphabet, it appears neither in the beginning or the end of it, etc., etc. For me personally, it just needs something more.

Fender Telecasters

A plain shape of guitar, fitted with weedy single coil pickups. They don't sound terrible, but if used when playing metal, you really need to know what you're doing. Few people in the genre can pull single coils off. Yngwie Malmsteen actually does so very well, he just very famously needs to slow the flip down.

Minis

Far from spectacular, but they're not death traps either. I'd HATE to own a death trap!

Mist

Favourite weather of escaping thieves, but I'm not a thief, so I'm mostly indifferent to this weather. If driving you can just put your fog lights on. That's all you need to do.

March

A fairly dull month. It doesn't suck like January famously does, and it's certainly not at the same level as December, but it could be worse. Spring is just round the corner/here in March, and whilst Summer follows Spring and I kind of hate Summer as do Deftones and their track 'My Own Summer', let's just live in the moment for a bit. Ah Spring. It's alright.

1kg weights

Not heavy, not light. Forgettable weights.

Roast potato flavoured crisps

My dad had a theory where flavoured crisps were in fact crisps made from potatoes that had gone bad, and the flavourings were used to mask the real taste. That theory was proved wrong by me, when I found a perfectly edible unflavoured crisp in a pack of I think prawn cocktail. Powned. Anyway, roast potato crisps are pretty meh. PC are good, though.

8 string guitars

Contrary to popular belief, you don't need to tune down a whole octave to sound heavy. Actually, playing at 400bpm and screaming about killing people will make you sound heavy. 8 strings are meh, too.

Solar panels

A bit of a random one this, but that may be because they never really stuck in my mind. Do they stick in your mind? If not, you're perhaps indifferent to them too. And you thought you were green. :(

100bpm

Not particularly slow, certainly not fast. It's the kind of tempo you hear all the time on the radio. The day I hear a 400bpm song on the radio, is the day I give a very hearty laugh.

My uncle's taste in music

Yep for the finale, I'm bringing up my uncle again. If you met him, you'd know why. Wow. Having said that, the jazz and blues music he listens to? It's not for me. But I don't dislike it, so he we go.

So, what have we learnt with this monologue? Well, I don't care about solar energy, (but only subconsciously), I think modern metal tries to be badass, but really the death metal of the 80s is basically as heavy as it gets, and of course when it comes to flavoured crisps, there really is nothing to worry about. If Walkers say their products are quality, then they're quality. That's basically it! Bye!
