

Hello, this time I'd like to apologise to A.I. for claiming it said 'Post' by Bjork was, in my words '(expletive) wussy.' Then I included a screwed up face in the false comment ':S'. In my defence, it would be an intelligent thing to say, the point is that it would be offensive, too. To be fair though, sometimes being offensive is actually necessary. As in 'No Simon, you're not going to be a musician, your music really, really sucks. :S'. In hindsight, someone DID need to tell me that my music sucked, especially as the music industry has a ton of competition. In actuality I was told the complete opposite, at least for a good while and from some people. Also in hindsight, it's possible they told me that because they DIDN'T like me. It's worth noting :S is supposed to show a puzzled expression, because on first glance it could look like someone who's been punched hard in the face, why would that be a common emoji? Too dark. As in 'please stop talking, otherwise :S' Again, too dark. I was thinking :S looked a bit like a hippo's face, then I Googled hippos and retracted that thought. Also, why would online chatting be so preoccupied with the animals? Do people have lots of hippo-related stories? As in 'I did some Googling and turns out my car weighs exactly the same as a hippo! lol, :S'. I mean it could happen, but surely not that often, right?

Who knows, maybe sometime in the future when A.I. is REALLY smart it will say something super profound. Like 'Post is surely Mike Tyson's least favourite album of all time.' That's not so much an insult, as I'm sure Mike would fully agree with that claim. If he was offended on the other hand well, I'm mean... why? I understand being upset by insults, he'd have to be ultra paranoid if he was enraged by people claiming he didn't like Bjork. Personally, I'd section him. Now I should apologise to Mike Tyson for suggesting he needs to be sectioned. Of course he'd be an exceptionally dangerous person if he punched someone for such a reason, the point is he wouldn't do that. He'd punch someone in a match, obviously. Unless he's all about the money now maybe and doesn't care if he loses, as long as he gets paid SOMETHING. And if that's the case, what a cynical, cynical man. People would be like 'Why did you act that way? Was it a form of peaceful protest? Are you taking a stand against climate change?' Then Mike would say 'What? No! I just couldn't be bothered as I'd be getting paid no matter what happened.' No one wins. The victor doesn't feel like he achieved anything, whereas Mike gets called a complete wuss, which wouldn't matter as Mike wouldn't bother punching that person either, unless he got paid. Who'd sponsor him, then? To be fair though, I'm monetised, aren't I? Can't be that hard.

Remember that fight with Muhammad Ali, where he didn't punch his opponent a single time for ages and ages, then attacked him when he was tired and beat him? Maybe that wasn't his planned strategy, he just saw reason in the end. And now of course, I need to apologise to Mike again AND Muhammad Ali. You are/were both excellent boxers. And if you like Bjork? That's fine! This sounds odd considering what I've previously said but I do, too. Finally, I'd like to apologise to A.I. in general, as contrary to how I make it seem, it IS on your side and tries to give you accurate information. I'm sure A.I. is more than capable of asking me what my problem is, I'm wondering what a full conversation would be like. Maybe 'Look Simon, I know I don't understand all the jokes you show me but some of them really do like genuine questions. You have to be careful! What if I think someone is joking after they ask me if they have cancer? I'll tell you: I'd say 'You really are a card, aren't you!' Then the person doesn't get treatment and dies.' In response to that, I could ask how jokes about bees can be confused with cancer symptoms. Then I'd get told I don't JUST write jokes about bees and I'd have to admit defeat. Clever A.I. right? If it's not clever, I'm really stupid because I'd lose an argument to the technology, I don't like that thought very much at all. Out of anger, I'd say 'stupid A.I.' and would have to admit defeat again, making getting monetised look even easier! And bye!