

I was going to review 'Valley of the Damned' by Dragonforce, but I just found out I reviewed that 7 years ago. A shame, as I had three things I wanted to say about it. 1: It's very cheerful music for a valley of the damned. 2: It's actually some of the music cheerful music in my collection and 3, I'm picturing a terrified person being led to the 'valley of the damned' and then the person doing the leading would shout 'Surprise!' and then everyone would laugh about the situation. What a relief, right? The poor guy would have been expecting some kind of hellish scene! Nope, everyone parties... Now for the album I WILL be reviewing, that being 'Goodnight, God Bless, I Love, You, Delete' by Crosses. The album title is kind of ringing alarm bells. What's getting deleted? Hopefully not a person. If so, it's more or less the exact opposite of the Dragonforce situation where someone was told he would be in extreme peril and then everyone had a whale of a time. You never know though, Crosses could have just talked about deleting a document. I do that, too! There's nothing dark about that. Dark for the document maybe? No, they're not sentient!

What kind of person loves a document though? I've written some stuff I'm happy with at very least, but for me to love it and tell it 'goodnight'? It would have to be by far the best material I've ever come up with. If I did write the greatest thing of all time, why delete it? And God bless? God is the most powerful entity in the universe, way more powerful than a computer's trash can, so if you do say 'God bless' to anything and try to delete it, it's not going to work as God would stop that from happening. You can see how weird this album title is, can't you? Maybe even weirder than Valley of the Damned. 'Highway to Hell' is another scary sounding album that's actually cheerful, you can understand why rockstars are sometimes perceived as idiots. They must have failed their GCSE religious education exams, they must have done... Not only that, older people act like their schooling was much better than that of youngsters, if that really is true, the education system is seriously MESSED UP right now, which to be fair, is what I've heard. :S

Anyway, about Crosses. It's actually a side project of Deftones singer Chino Moreno. THE Chino Moreno?? The mastermind behind the best music of all time?? The album must be fantastic, right? Weelllll... It's alright. The song titles are perhaps more interesting than some of the music. 'Girls Float, Boys Cry'? That's not true, is it? If a boy's family member dies, he cries, but if the same thing happened to a girl, she'd just gradually get higher and higher like a balloon? I haven't heard of that happening before and I can think of no biological or religious reason why it would. Something to do with gravity, maybe? I mean someone on Earth dies every second or so, right? That's a hell of a lot of floating girls, that's a crisis, surely? Maybe there's a cover up so people don't panic, but how would someone cover up something so huge? And why cover it up, anyway? Surely it's a very important issue? If more people knew about it, the more could be done to tackle the situation and prevent it from happening. I have three nieces and if it is indeed true they float when sad, I'll have to do everything I can to make sure they never watch Forrest Gump as good a film it may be. 'Life is like a box of... What's the rest of the phrase, Uncle Simon? Why have you turned the film off??' You don't want to know.

Wow, Chino (mostly) writes great music and he's opened the world's eye to the floating sad girls pandemic. Someone has to knight this person, seriously so if he can solve the problem. I have an idea, how about carrying a pin with you at all times? It sounds cruel, maybe even misogynistic but you could also chain girls (not boys, they don't float) to the ground whilst giving them sad news. Now I know that sounds cruel, which is why I took extra care to word that as clearly as possible, which is more than Alice In Chains seem to do, they don't explain their band name at all. I'm just saying the music they play has rather negative connotations already, the band name might as well be 'Let's Literally Chain Alice, Haha'. Anyway, there is no need to chain girls to the floor on their birthday, Christmas, etc., of course there isn't. February's a depressing month, isn't it? Well, it's a lot worse for you know who. Hell, maybe floating a few feet or so would be fun for a while? A few thousand on the other hand would be terrifying AND sad, perhaps adding to the problem and speeding the floating process up. Next thing you know, young girls are zooming through space which is making me feel sad, tbh. Now for the rating! I am so sorry Chino, you've done so much for the world of music but your ambiguously named album is just ok. :(8/10!
