

We all know coronavirus sucks, especially people who have the disease. (Well it sucks unless they're mental. Or maybe if they live in Antarctica and want a fever to be warm... Is that how it works? I honestly have no idea. I got told cold weather makes fevers worse. Bit weird, especially for a five year old. And what the HELL was Santa about? Can't get my head round it). But does this whole situation completely suck? Maybe not, let's find out! And expect more references to craziness! I'm building up quite the collection, no?

Pro No.1: Because of all the extra time you get to spend indoors, you get more time to blog! Not only does that mean I write better quality stuff, it also means I censor myself more, meaning I don't get sectioned under the mental health act. (Actually, because you're so miserable you don't really feel like working. Really I've started things off with a con. Damn. But TECHNICALLY speaking you do get more time. Let's make up a new word for this paragraph: Procon!)

THIS is a pro: Because you get more time in doors, you get more chances to listen to music on high quality CD players. (Again, not so much of a pro as modern portable players are pretty good. BUT earplugs are more likely to deafen you. Another procon! Sort of. I think. Two in a row? This word needs to catch on. Sure you could say 'ambivalent' instead, but it's longer and harder to spell).

NOW this is a pure pro: You get more time to watch Youtube, whilst lying on your bed. (Again, I'm sad to say watching videos can be an addiction, so you don't really want to make things worse, do you?? And of course some Youtube videos suck. Imagine getting addicted to things that aren't even good. Goddamn it lockdown).

Let's see if coming up with a con makes a pro: Life is really boring with the virus. Nope, didn't work. Next!

Pro: You have an excuse not to go the gym. Dammit! Gyms are fun! The next one will be good, I'm feeling lucky.

Pro: Spending money on indoor exercise bikes feels justified. Yes! I've done it! A traditional pro! But I'm not risking coming up with another one. So here's another con! :)

Con: You have to wear masks all the time... But wait... Wearing masks in cold weather warms you up! I've done what I tried to do in the fourth point! Bangin'.

???: I can't work out if this is a pro or a con. You decide - The super-tempting and irresistible special grape shop in Staines has closed down.

Indifferent point: Nothing really happens to petrol stations, there are just green arrows telling you where to walk. :S

Pro: I can eat as many normal grapes I want from such shops.

Pro: Dogs are happier in fuller houses. That's a nice one.

Pro: Because dogs are happier, cats are more annoyed. Stupid cats.

Con: Because cats are annoyed, bird killings are more vicious. Birds now sing in a more agitated tone, upsetting (almost) everyone.

Pro: Deaf people are fine.

Con: I get accused of not caring about cats. Making things worse, I don't actually care about cats.

Con: Consequently, cats attack me.

Con: I can't stop talking about cats, even though deep down I want to.

Con: CATS CATS CATS CATS! Please help me!!

Pro: All better, now.

Con: There's a cat outside, staring at me angrily. I don't know what to do.

Pro: No, only joking.

Pro: You have an excuse not to go out in rainy weather.

Con: I own a jacket. And I don't even mind the rain.

Pro: Because they're depressed, burglars are more sluggish and easier to catch.

Con: Because of lockdown, I'm doing this monologue and I don't really know what I'm doing, and to be blunt I can't be bothered. You may have been able to tell. The cats obsession was a warning sign. The procon new word idea was fairly decent, though. Well I think so.

Pro: Tramps effectively have whole streets to themselves. That must be nice for them.

Pro: The government doesn't have to worry quite so much about tramp wellbeing as they're having a great time. Maybe funds could go to depressed people like me. Sure mental health services get plenty of funding, but I'm saying I want funds JUST for me. :)

Ok, they're all the pros and cons I can think of. Most of them were pretty dumb, and perhaps some of my language didn't make sense, but in the grand scheme of things...
