

This is a weird one, if you look at the cover of Anthrax's album 'Among the Living' you will see what looks exactly like an aged David Lee Roth, even his facial expression and posture is the same. The album was released way back in 1987! What were the band prophesying exactly? Simply how Mr. Roth would look over 30 years later? Perhaps more importantly, WHY were the band predicting that? I'm picturing the band members drunkenly saying things like 'You know that David Lee Roth guy... this is how I think he'll look like when he's older, hahaha woo!...' Then the rest of the band would be like '... that's pretty good actually, I think we should make that our cover art...' The third person would say 'But what to call the album? I know... Among the living! That makes sense! Because y'know, woo!' I'm saying they were drunk because come on, they'd have to be! Surely the band weren't deeply pondering what the guy would like in 30 or so years as it's well beyond random, obviously. Some philosophers wonder what the meaning of life is, Anthrax wonder when DLR would look like as an old man. I'm not truly mocking the band though as they did a very good job!

The album was recorded from 'October - December 1986' and Roth's birthday is the 10th of October 1954. Not a massive coincidence, fine but here's something that's really weird, remember the attacks when people were posted anthrax spores? On October 10th 2001, the Guardian covered the story. Ok, not in 1954 but at very least on the man's birthday. This will be disturbing for the band, but all things considered, who do you think were the main suspects? A group of people apparently obsessed with the date and who actually called themselves 'Anthrax'? It's not looking good is it? And don't worry, I've already made a note telling me to do another apology, expect it soon. To summarise, I'm very sorry Anthrax. I'm sure you are 100% innocent. But come on, calling another album 'Spreading the Disease'? Thank God that was released years before the attacks, but their album 'We've Come for You All' wasn't, that name could have been better thought out. Stop making albums that sound like threats and confessions!

If you search on Youtube 'Anthrax - "Indians" October 10, 2010' you will see the band playing a live song that starts with the frontman saying 'It's time for the war dance!!' That's a creepy birthday message, isn't it? Why don't you just leave the guy alone? Suggest it could be a time for a dance sure, but don't force the bop or whatever dance it is on the poor person. I don't care what the situation is, I'm not dancing for anyone. 'It's time for the war dance'? Oh, go away. What do you want me to dance with knives? Guns? You don't me to dance with anthrax spores, do you? It's simply not how I celebrate and it's making me uncomfortable that you seem to. Their album 'State of Euphoria' suggests drug use, doesn't it? Count me out of that party, as well. David Lee Roth on the other hand loved to party and MAYBE that's why he appeared on the cover. He should have appeared on State of Euphoria, though; everyone on Earth is living, talk about a vague name for an LP. I should also point out that David would never spread anthrax, even if a group of musicians put the thought in his mind. A great guy!

I Googled if DLR was meant to feature in the album cover, and it said no. How about an aged DLR from the future, then? Again, no. What the internet did say though, was that the album cover's concept is to say that 'evil is amongst us.' That must be depressing for Dave. Some of the worst parties of all time and when he dies, he goes to Hell. I've asked A.I. if Anthrax are psychic and it said there was no evidence or public information to suggest any member of the band has psychic abilities... Until I've came along, that is! I liked how the search engine wasn't confident, though. I've just asked if people in general can be psychic and again, the internet was unsure. It would be hilarious if it said 'definitely not, but possibly Anthrax'. Wow, that's incredible. Dave would be having a particularly rough time though I'm sure. If I ever featured on the album cover of a psychic band obsessed with disease I'd seriously be concerned about my health at some point in the future. And on that mystical note... bye!
