

Hello, this time I would like to apologise for saying author Linda Davies does drugs, steals ideas, and could have possibly been raised by cattle and even worse, fraudulent cattle. That's an attack, isn't it? That's well beyond spreading rumours, that's full blown character assassination. I'm really wondering what the point of that would be. I've never met her, I only even heard of her just yesterday, what could she have possibly done to me or indeed anyone? The only thing I can think of is her ignoring me at a book signing. I don't get a 'hello'? Well in that case YOU do drugs, are a thief and your parents were cows. Payback. She was probably just busy, that's all and even if she DID notice me, wouldn't it make sense for her to avoid me if I'm capable of claiming such things? I really should be grateful she just ignored me and didn't call the police. Then again, what could she say before I had the chance to say anything? She could say she just had a vibe things were wrong, but that's no excuse to arrest someone. Unless she mentioned my name, maybe. Then the police would be like 'ooooh, I know the one'. If she called the feds AFTER I made my mad claims, though? World news. :(

I'm trying to think if there has been anyone who done all the things I have mentioned. There must be at least some people who have done drugs and stolen ideas, but there can't be anyone who was raised by cattle. Hung around cattle whilst high maybe, so who might THAT be? No famous people are coming to mind. Let's use A.I. Ok, Andy Cato, Alex James, JB Gill, Ian Tyson and Carrie Underwood are all musicians who raise cattle at least. Why did I search for musicians in particular? Because they all do drugs. Surely one of those artists stole at least SOME ideas, too. Well, well, well. The first four artists are apparently squeaky clean, BUT Carrie Underwood has been involved in 'several lawsuits where songwriters accused her of music theft, but she has not been legally found guilty of stealing music'. All she has to do is take drugs (all musicians take drugs), hang around her cows for a while and then she would be how I first imagined Linda Davies to be. Weird. No wait, I feel like I should very sincerely apologise to Carrie, if not there is the very real possibility I will get sued. Sorry, Carrie! The internet does say you're innocent!!!!!! Also, most musicians DO NOT take drugs!!!! Is that apology enough, though? It seems like no...

I'm also sorry for saying band Greenleaf's record labels were Satanic. It's just that Hell is known for having fire everywhere, and two of the group's labels mention fire, those being Molten Universe, and Napalm. The latter label is arguably more disturbing. If you do get sent to Hell, at very least there is a 'universe' to see and possibly explore if you're lucky. If you simply get covered in napalm when you die however, you'll be in severe pain AND bored. Oh yes, the whole point of this apology is to say the band's labels are completely harmless. They really are! And of course just because a label is called 'Magnetic Eye Records', doesn't mean the company wants iron nails to fly in people's eyes. 'Magnetic' also means attractive, and if I had to put money on whether the label wants to blind everyone or be attractive to others, I'd say it would be the latter. I'm also sorry for saying final label 'Small Stone' sounds boring. Fine, it's a bad gift for someone but at the same time it's compact and strong and therefore is something to be admired. Not exactly thought of as 'cool' by youngsters, but something for physicists to appreciate.

Even though I've only just found who she is AND I cleared her name in the end, I really do think I should try very hard to put things right between me and Carrie

Underwood, but more so. Her song titles seem rather contradictory (she has 'How Great Thou Art' AND 'Before He Cheats') but I'm sure her music is very, very good. I could check, but I'm currently listening to Yngwie Malmsteen instead. I mean she won American Idol in 2005! Wow! Ok, the Yng song has finished, I suppose it wouldn't be a very good apology if I didn't check out Carrie's music and say how great it is. So, is 'How Great Thou Art' really great? I think yes! And as it's a holy song, the thought of the singer being on drugs is ridiculous!! In her music video she is playing in a large theatre but every seat is empty. That's weird as she is approaching 3 million subscribers. Someone really screwed up the gig's advertising, didn't they? But the singer still sings with passion and that should be admired! Phew, everything cleared up, bye!