

Hello, I'm afraid I have to apologise again. In my most recent dentist blog, I wrote a joke that didn't make sense because it was worded badly. I could have corrected my blog just now, but if I did that, I wouldn't be able to apologise about it. Between you and me, I like apologising, it gives me things to write about. Sadly that makes me a very dangerous person as I have a huge incentive to commit crimes. Well minor crimes, anyway. Obviously if I did something really bad like rob a bank, a simple web apology wouldn't be enough to make things right. However, if I simply threw a water balloon at someone and was charged with common assault? A post straight to WiedemannComedy.com. And throwing the balloon wouldn't just be something to write about, it would make me feel alive as well. Again, a very dangerous trait. :(

Whilst I did apologise to Lief Edling for mistyping his album name, I didn't apologise for saying he's such a bad singer he should sack himself from his own band. I wouldn't say he was THAT bad, just tone things down a bit, that's all. It's like spices in food. Some amount of the ingredient is very nice, but there comes a point where it's way too much. I like curry, but I don't like pepper spray in my eyes, (such sprays have capsaicin in, as do peppers) and you're singing to me at least and in a way, is just a little bit like pepper spray in the eyes. But you know what? Say if I get sick of my book not making my money, and I decide to become a method actor instead. There could be a fictional (thank God) situation where I would be really, really upset, where Papa John's decide to shut ALL of their stores. All I need is some pepper spray to the face, and I would be crying like crazy. If anything, the spray wouldn't make me cry enough.

Here's a REALLY big apology: I would very much like to apologise to the whole of Detroit for saying the area is so rough, everyone there wants to blow it up and the rest of the world as well, as the residents assume everywhere is as bad as where they live. According to Google, the city has over 30 art museums! :O There is an internet article saying 'Detroit is literally for everybody' which sounds good, but for me, that's part of the problem. I'm talking crazy people, etc. However, the same article says 'it's easy to get around' there, and that IS cool, like really. The article also says 'the cost of living in Detroit is below the national average' which again, could suggest something isn't right there. But, easy to get around and that's the main thing. It's easy to find the police station if you're robbed.

Now I'd like to apologise to at least MOST whales for saying their songs are so loud they can kill people. Whilst blue whales are super duper ultra loud, the majority of whales are very much law abiding and their songs are completely harmless, they even sometimes feature on relaxation CDs! Ever heard of a human killer featuring on such albums? No? Well that's because almost all whales are a million miles away from human murderers AND whale murderers. Whales are also known for having a love of pregnant women and show their support by hanging around them and being friendly. Ah, Google say it's actually DOLPHINS that like women to be pregnant. But you know what? Both whales and dolphins look like fish, but are actually mammals! So I was damn close. As the two animals have so much in common, I'm wondering why whales don't seem to like pregnant women. What I do know, is whales aren't baby haters. If they were, they would have no record company support.

Finally I'd like to apologise to the gym car park for misusing it when in a nearby, mental health doctor checkup. But you know the phrase 'healthy body, healthy mind'? I was thinking 'healthy mind, healthy body' and for that reason, I thought using the car park was perfectly valid. What I'm trying to say is, mental health services and gyms are basically the same thing at the end of the day, so in a weird way, I did nothing wrong. Because of that, I would like to retract my apology. Now really finally, I guess I should apologise to dolphins and whales for mixing the two up. Nope, time to retract another apology, Google says whales and dolphins often like each other! I'm sure whales and dolphins hate fishermen, but only a total madman would ever compare such a person to such creatures so little offence can occur for the animals, there. And on that crazy note, bye!