

Simon: Here's a good palindrome: Del's LED.

Simon: Straight to palindromes? I don't even get a hello?

Simon: Hello.

Simon: Hello. And please stop with all the palindromes.

Simon: Ok. Fair point. Here's a thought: Don't Corona super spreads sounds delicious?

Simon: I think you mean super SPREADERS. And no.

Simon: Really? I heard it as super spreads. As in Nutella.

Simon: No, you were wrong. Did you never hear the word 'virus' after Corona?

Simon: Nope.

Simon: Ah. Well, you see, there is a very dangerous virus out there called 'Coronavirus' and it has absolutely nothing to do with sandwiches at all. At least I've never heard of it used in sandwiches.

Simon: Wow. Sorry about that.

Simon: It's ok. You know now.

Simon: I really was hoping for something tasty and exotic. Corona sounds kind of fruity. If there was a Corona fruit I wouldn't be surprised.

Simon: Again, you know now.

Simon: Here's something cool: I just looked at my computer clock, and it was exactly 10:00:00. Interestingly, the time 10:00:01 immediately follows that. As far as I'm aware, that's the only time of day when two great numbers are so close together.

Simon: Actually go back to foods. But keep it light.

Simon: I want to get a chocolate bar, later.

Simon: I say go for it.

Simon: But it's a slippery slope, isn't it? They're so addictive...

Simon: But lockdown... It's driving us mental. You need something to look forward to.

Simon: You're right.

Simon: Actually don't talk about foods. You're self-plagiarising.

Simon: Yeah... I hate that word.

Simon: Why?

Simon: It reminds me of plague.

Simon: And plague sounds like vague.

Simon: At least I don't like things that are vague, either. Here's an interesting point: I like Polos, but I don't like Polio.

Simon: It must be frustrating how the words are so similar.

Simon: Exactly. I also don't like how Cherry Aid sounds like AIDS.

Simon: You're suggesting the English language needs to be completely revolutionised?

Simon: Yes, like the decimalisation of money?

Simon: Yes! I think everyone agrees that was a good idea.

Simon: I'd be a hero.

Simon: Not among OAPs though.

Simon: Yeah, they'd be trying to enjoy their retirement, then I come along with a whole new way of talking.

Simon: How many words do you think need changing?

Simon: Well, there's bird and turd...

Simon: Birds are pretty...

Simon: Exactly my thinking. So let's rename them 'Dritties'. Then there's curry and hurry. You don't want to eat curries in a hurry. You're supposed to enjoy them. So let's call them bows. As in slows.

Simon: But if you eat them too slowly, they get cold...

Simon: Yikes. This is VERY complicated.

Simon: I have to be honest, I don't think it's worth the effort.

Simon: Here's a thought: When you see words that you are supposed to read on Youtube videos for example, you never get a timer telling you when the writing will disappear. Consequently, you rush the reading out of fear, and THEREFORE you don't take the information in properly.

Simon: I think writing timers would be a good idea, actually...

Simon: Right, you get egg timers, don't you? Are eggs more important than words?

Simon: Exactly. Some words are VERY important. You don't want to rush reading something like 'If you want to live, call this number...' What if you end up calling a curry house by mistake?

Simon: That would be upsetting for everyone involved. And that would be a very dark Youtube video.

Simon: Just an example.

Simon: Ok. Good point, then.

Simon: On another note (literally) I've just received my new R.E.M. album by post. What's really impressive is that Amazon says it isn't even out for delivery, yet. How trippy is that?

Simon: Wow, I knew Amazon were efficient, but I didn't know they could bend time.

Simon: Crazy days.

Simon: Is the album any good?

Simon: I've just put it on, now. I'm expecting great things, it got 5 stars.

Simon: Ooh!

Simon: I have to say I'm not too impressed with the first song...

Simon: But 5 stars means perfect...

Simon: That's what I thought. The album's getting better, though.

Simon: Huh.

Simon: This is a boring topic, isn't it?

Simon: Yes.

Simon: Yeahhh. I'm not saying I prefer Coronavirus over R.E.M., though.

Simon: Of course, of course. What do you prefer, R.E.M. or chocolate?

Simon: Well I don't think the band are bad for my physical health...

Simon: Great, you prefer R.E.M. Just checking: What's better chocolate or Coronavirus?

Simon: It HAS to be chocolate...

Simon: But you're not sure?

Simon: Well Coronavirus doesn't cause diabetes, at least...

Simon: I hate to say this but I've just Googled whether it does or not, and an article says the virus could trigger the disease...

Simon: Why?? Coronavirus isn't like a bar of chocolate is it?

Simon: Maybe that's how the virus gets you. In disguise.

Simon: No!

Simon: Only joking. I think.

Simon: I think we both need time to reflect, or we're going to go crazy.

Simon: Agreed.

Simon: Byeeeeeee.
