

Due to the popularity of my last Q&A, I will be answering more of your questions from around the globe! First up, we have Angelic Pete from St. Petersburg. You couldn't make it up, could you?

Pete: Do you have any regrets?

Simon: I regret not coming up with a better signature. At the time of 'designing' it, I was a bit depressed and just did a scribble. I'd definitely like to come up with something more creative and less forgeable. Some people say they don't have any regrets, but I don't believe that. I don't really have any flashbacks or nightmares about my signature, that would be nuts, but I'm still unhappy with it.

I'm Not Trying to Make You Depressed, from Sunny, Beautiful Australia: Is there anything in your life you're missing?

Simon: I need more socks. It's getting quite ridiculous, now. Some of my socks have turned into mere 'ankle warmers'. There's not kind of toe covering left at all. On the plus side, my toes are slowly being able to tolerate colder and colder temperatures. Kind of like adventurers travelling to Antarctica.

Random Michael, North-east Belarus coffee shop, by the dentist: What do you think of the tracking feature on the Amazon website?

Simon: I not long ago looked on the site to see where my package was, and it said it was few hundred meters away, and the worker had one more stop to go to. Hours later and I still didn't get it. I was thinking 'This poor individual is on foot and has been crippled!' I checked on the apparent casualty later, and it seemed he went into the wrong direction. God knows where he got the extra orders from, but apparently he did from somewhere. All whilst disabled, which is certainly stoical. I also recently slammed the door on another Amazon delivery worker, supplying acid-like mouthwash, by accident, but it could definitely have been taken the wrong way. The truth is I really like the company.

Serious Helmut, Germany: Have you ever talked unfairly about a well known company/been immature?

Simon: No, I don't think so.

Website Truth-seeker, Spain: Do you have anything else to say about Amazon?

Simon: I'm a little annoyed I was forced to pay for a more expensive delivery service when I ordered my mouthwash. I certainly didn't need it immediately, I don't know what the company were trying to say.

Nosey Neil, Where do YOU live?: What have you been doing when you've been trying to come up with answers?

Simon: I've been throwing twigs at upright pens and knocking them over. Don't knock it until you've tried it. Pardon the pun! :D

Nosey Neil, Where do YOU live?: Why?

Simon: I don't know. Sorry.

Nosey Neil, Where do YOU live?: What's the biggest mystery in your life?

Simon: When I was around 6, I swear I saw a yellow scorpion on my door mat. I have no idea how it got there or where it went. As far as I'm aware it never offended though, which is lucky because according to Google, it could have been a Deathstalker scorpion, which does sound bad.

Friendly and Sane Fred. Many, many miles away: Have you ever seen a snake in the wild?

Simon: Yes! An adder in Chobham Common. How about that??

Friendly and Sane Fred. Many, many miles away: Have you ever seen a slowworm in the wild?

Simon: Yes the same place!

Friendly and Sane Fred. Many, many miles away: Have you ever seen Woking from a distant hill?

Simon: You've been stalking me, haven't you?

Friendly and Sane Fred, no seriously, I'm miles away: I have to go.

Leonardo, Rome: What country do you think has the best names?

Simon: I like the sound of Italian names like Raphael, possibly because of The Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles I watched growing up. Pizza's great, too, obviously. Then I read about this Italian guy who wanted someone to set fire to him. Then I thought, no something's definitely wrong, here. That's way too intense. Wow. I'd recommend valium, but I think he's beyond that.

Brian Cox, England: What's your favourite fact?

Simon: Guess how many atoms are in the universe...

Brian Cox: I don't know...

Simon: Guess...

Brian Cox: 10 with a trillion zeros...

Simon: That's what I would have thought. It's actually (approximately) 10 with 80 zeros!

Brian Cox: Cool!

Simon: Yes, very cool.

Friendly and sane Ned. Many miles away but in a different direction. TRUST ME: If you could have a super power, what would it be and why?

Simon: I always wanted to be able to move my little toe independently, but I never could. I'm not sure why I'd want to do so. It's not really something you could show off like you would an amazing work of art, but at the same time, it would be at least a bit impressive.

The Sausage Roll killer, from Mind your own business: What do you know about me? You don't know where I live, do you?

Simon: What?? Hey, didn't I make you up?

SRK: What?? If anything, I made you up. Nutjob.

Simon: No, I know you! What crazy schemes are you up to now?

SRK: Screw you!

General experiences surveyor, London: Have you ever had someone ask if you are on drugs? If so, what happened?

Simon: As you may know I am on drugs, for schizophrenia, but obviously if I said I was on drugs with no explanation, that could be taken the wrong way. Fortunately a policeman has never asked me 'Are you on drugs? Yes or no, I don't have much time.' I'd have to just say 'Yes', wouldn't I? If he asked the follow up question 'Why? To get high or simply to make you feel better? Which one is it? Again, use as few words as possible, I still don't have much time,' I'd have to say 'To make me feel better', which again, doesn't sound good. The next question 'How long have you been on them?' would be the nail in the coffin for me, as I've been on drugs most of my life. :( If he then asked 'Have you ever driven whilst on drugs?' well... I'd be straight to jail. I do drive on drugs, and it's my genuine belief such drugs make me better at the activity. How cocky could that misunderstanding make me look?

Friendly NHS worker, Surrey: Are you worried about the flu jab?

Simon: Na. Unless it comes from a heavy weight boxer, that is. I can see why some people say the jab could be worse for you than the disease itself.

Super Dealer, anywhere in minutes: What do you think of cheap CDs available at charity shops?

Simon: You know what, I wish they were more expensive. That's not so mental health organisations get better funded and get more staff, because I personally want them to leave me alone, it's actually because cheap prices quite literally cheapen CDs and metaphorically, too. If they cost around £3 maybe, that would be better for everyone, in my opinion.

Tell me what you need, also anywhere in minutes: What's been keeping you going in lockdown?

Simon: Takeaways, basically. I can't believe things have been like this for a whole year. I watched a documentary on Youtube about a high security German prison, and the prisoners were living better than I do! It would be like me robbing a bank and then the police throwing me a huge party. 'You want chicken sides and potato tots with your pizza? Come with me! Oh and you like stuffed crust, right? Then you can play on the Playstation. But don't even think about assaulting me, or you'll only have to spend more time in jail. More time to disco!' Imagine an ignorant German killing someone in America. He'd be like 'So...Where's the shindig?' Next thing you know, he gets executed.

Ok thats all we have time for! Hopefully no mental health professionals have been reading. if they have - whoops. What else to say? I guess just.... byeeeeeeeeeeeeee.