

Today, I'll be reviewing 'Infiltrate, Destroy, Rebuild' by CKY. One Allmusic.com reviewer said the opening track was one of the best on the album, but to me all songs are more or less the same quality. It's because it's the first song, isn't it? First impressions and all that. If so, get off AM, it's a serious site. I know that's coming from me, but in comparison if I went to an art museum (bearing in mind I know nothing about art), I would be optimistic at first. I'd be like 'wow, cool drawing.' Then I'd get bored and think everything else is alright, then finally rubbish. For that reason, I think the Allmusic guy should be sacked. Of course I'm not the kind of person who goes around trying to make people lose their jobs, maybe by planting cocaine in their pockets and rambling notes, but the employer of the reviewer DOES know he made a mistake at least?

It's also like trying to review the best soap episode of all time. We all know they're all the same. If they weren't you'd actually be able to remember the episodes years later. The only soap episode I really recall (other than the ones where people kept falling down holes) was the one where a once beloved character who was exceptionally nice for years and years, suddenly went mad and went around stabbing people, because his dog died. Then he was nice again. (Or something like that. That's genuinely how I remember it anyway, no joke). It was on Neighbours. And that was many years ago now, way before the show was pulled from British television. God knows how bad the show must be now. Isn't the 40 year old character Toadfish going out with a 90 year old or whatever in the show? Sure, it's hard to admit everything blurs into one whilst trying to appear analytical, but reviewers are truth seekers, no? Therefore, the reviewer commenting on IDR should apologise for trying to be too clever. Just say it's all the same. Not in a bad way, but in comforting, structured way.

Have I talked about the do-gooding mass murderer before on this site? Not sure. If so, you're getting told about him again. I think that's perfectly fair enough. Now CKY again! I just complained about the Allmusic guy, but to be fair things are far worse on Amazon. One so called 'reviewer' gave a one word review saying 'awful' and the word was spelt wrong. Very hard to take him seriously. (Unless he was making up a new word 'awfull' meaning full of aw, meaning full of adorableness. To be fair, it IS a fairly soft album despite the name). I guess things can always be worse, right? Taking things further, a reviewer could just say 'Fnkofdpskop5454wtes'. But tbh, I can't see how things can be worse than THAT. Maybe the phrase should be changed to 'Things can always be worse, up to certain point.' Or 'Things can always be worse unless it's gibberish'. If I wrote such a critique on the site I'm working for (Metal-Rules) I'm sure it would be like 'Well, we're thankful for all you've done for us, but we'll have to let you go. And don't bother replying to this email. You'll weird us out.'

Remember my Pitchshifter review where I pointed out their site was given up on? The same goes for CKY! Again, if they use Wix, all they need to spend is around £10 a month. Don't give me the 'we don't have time to maintain the web page' argument, because I don't buy it. On the contrary, if you choose to completely leave your site alone for years and years, that's completely up to you. What do you think will happen to it? It will get rusty? Of course not. CKY do have a Facebook page, but I was shocked to see how offensive some of their pictures were. They literally appear to be insulting the viewers. They do so in a clever way, but that makes things worse. I was thinking 'hey, that's pretty witty. Hang on, did you just flip me off?' The band bring me up, to bring me right down again. >:(

Now what to say? I feel a bit bad for bringing up apparent sitcom Neighbours again, so let's make this critique nice and beefy. No one likes rehashes, even if they're absolutely hilarious. Hm. Let's talk about the band name. Apparently CKY stands for 'Camp Kill Yourself'. Even songs that are about suicide are controversial, but band names that TELL you to die? Wow. It could be worse, the band could be called 'Do it, you wuss', but CKY is still pretty bad, I think. The album name is almost equally aggressive. If you told someone to kill himself, then you shouted 'INFILTRATE, DESTROY, REBUILD!!!!' you'd honestly get sectioned immediately. Having said all that... good album! 9/10. I promise to try not to talk about Neighbours again, but wow. Unforgettable. Bye!
