

Simon: Hello! Heard anyone say anything ridiculous?

Simon: Yes, this is something I've never got over...

Simon: What?

Simon: Someone said Dominoes pizza tastes like cardboard!

Simon: Woah there...

Simon: I know! The obvious question is 'what are you on about??' However, if you go a little deeper there is a very interesting possibility...

Simon: What?

Simon: This guy gets items wrapped in pizza...

Simon: Why?

Simon: No idea and good point. It is doable, though. Not like wrapping something in curry...

Simon: You could wrap something in naan bread, though.

Simon: Yes. But as you said, the point is why?

Simon: Save the trees?

Simon: But pizza is made from tomatoes. Are tomatoes less important than trees?

Simon: People are confused about whether tomatoes are fruits or vegetables.

Simon: So what?

Simon: Tomatoes are annoying. They kind make up their minds.

Simon: So it's ok to kill and eat them?

Simon: I'm just saying what have trees done wrong? So yeah, I'd rather kill a tomato than a tree.

Simon: I've never heard that argument before.

Simon: It's an important one.

Simon: I see. How do you feel about cheese toppings?

Simon: Oh they're fine. People say milking cows upsets them, but put it this way: Is being milked worse than not being alive? Because if cows weren't milked, people wouldn't need them and there would hardly be any cows.

Simon: Interesting. And what about killing them for food?

Simon: That's fine as well.

Simon: I think you should lighten the atmosphere.

Simon: Of course. Know of any strange phrases?

Simon: Doesn't 'lying on your back' sound funny? How does that work?

Simon: You can lie on someone else's back...

Simon: Yes, but not your own.

Simon: You could write ' $1+1=3$ ' on your back if you tried hard enough... That's a lie on your back.

Simon: Why would you do that?

Simon: Lying on your back is good for back pain.

Simon: Ha. Who'd have thought?

Simon: Crazy. Do you still eat petrol station chicken wraps?

Simon: No, they're gone!

Simon: Oh no.

Simon: Yes. However, the replacement southern fried chicken bap is a breath of fresh air and almost as nice! The bread isn't perfect, but a damn fine attempt. I wonder if potato wedges will ever make a comeback.

Simon: Ah potato wedges. They were good.

Simon: I know! The petrol station does make some weird decisions. They don't change the kind of fuel people get, why change food? Is food less important? I would say the reverse is true.

Simon: An interesting argument... I however, would say that petrol is more important than food in a petrol station.

Simon: Yes, but not in general.

Simon: Ok. What's your dad's favourite music?

Simon: I don't know, he's a very secretive person. That's probably because he likes jazz music with people farting over the top.

Simon: I'd keep that a secret.

Simon: Exactly. Or maybe he likes operas about farting on people.

Simon: A similar style...

Simon: Yes, I think I might be onto something there. It has to be something weird.

Simon: You pointed out how clocks are sold at 10 past 10 so the hands look happy...

Simon: Yes, and Joe Satriani's 'Time Machine' album cover is filled with such clocks. I wonder why? Maybe as a really deep statement? However, the only meaning I can come up with is happy clocks.

Simon: The album cover clocks are all ten past ten?

Simon: Yes!

Simon: They're all showing the same time?

Simon: Yes, they all look happy. What's weird though, is some clocks are on their sides. If they want to look happy, the time should be different.

Simon: You should contact Joe and tell him.

Simon: Na. Too much hassle.

Simon: Do you have any thoughts about people hitting other people?

Simon: Yes, if you get simple battery (which I presume is battery in 4/4 as 4/4 is simple time) then you must get complex battery. What's that? Maybe battery in 17/8 for example.

Simon: A question for the drummers out there...

Simon: Or drumming judges...

Simon: Maybe you'd like to talk about things most people will understand?

Simon: How do you write emails without sounding like a dickhead? It's either sound sarcastic when saying 'thanks' or phoney when saying 'thanks!'

Simon: Can you give an example?

Simon: Yes: 'Hello Simon, I want you to write 10 essays, a book of poetry and a novel. I won't be paying you.' Then I say 'Thanks.' Doesn't that sound sarcastic to you?

Simon: I guess...

Simon: And me saying 'Thanks!' isn't much better.

Simon: Oh yeah. Have you been confused recently?

Simon: When I was about to get in the bath, I thought I saw a huge sunburn on one side of my back, (the side that gets shone on when in my bedroom) but on closer inspection it was really more of a tan which I guess isn't so bad. Having a tan on only one side looks a bit silly though. Then actually I thought 'no that is sunburn'. Not sure what's going on there. Surely my skin didn't go red to brown to red again in just a few seconds. Maybe it was just the lighting, but I didn't change the lighting. As a compromise, let's call half of my back reddish brown, I think that's what confused me. But NOW my back is half brown.

Simon: Good story.

Simon: Yes, and on TV I thought I saw a police station called 'Brownie' Station but actually it was Browne Station. I'm just saying that's a funny name. Similarly, imagine a police station called Chocolate Milkshake Police Station.

Simon: You know what? I don't know what story I like better.

Simon: Both are pretty good. Taking things further, death row could be called pudding row, the gallows could be called the cheesecakes, the death penalty could be called the creme brûlée penalty, etc.

Simon: Maybe that would cheer prisoners up.

Simon: Or make them angry...

Simon: Have you got any messages on the Amazon site?

Simon: Yes, I got an 'important' message on Amazon! Wow, what could it be? Turns out an item I was interested in has changed price.. It's now 1p cheaper. :O

Simon: 1p really isn't important to a beggar, even...

Simon: Amazon are going for the beggar audience?

Simon: No, people poorer than beggars.

Simon: That doesn't make sense.

Simon: How much did the product cost beforehand? If it was only 2p, 1p off would be half the price. You'd be making a steal!

Simon: About £5...

Simon: And what was the product?

Simon: I think it was mouthwash.

Simon: Mouthwash would be a great item for a beggar or someone poorer than a beggar. Many don't brush their teeth.

Simon: A beggar that has access to the internet and has an address where he can collect delivered items?

Simon: Where there's a will, there's a way.

Simon: Impressive. Amazon started out only selling books, now they're doing all sorts of crazy things. I wonder what will be next!

Simon: Selling hairspray to stray cats.

Simon: But cats can't handle money.

Simon: The cats pay with dead birds.

Simon: I'm sorry, this conversation is getting a bit too weird for me.

Simon: Me too. Any thoughts on the smells found in mental homes?

Simon: I've noticed how the same pleasing smell was found in my old mental home AND the place I get my Clozapine (medication for schizophrenia) blood tests done. Maybe the same perfume is used, or maybe mentally ill people smell nice.

Simon: That's a nice thought.

Simon: Yes, but to darken things how's this for a shady company: Endemol.

Simon: That's a real company?

Simon: Yeah. End 'em all.

Simon: What's the company do?

Simon: You'd think they provide assassins for hire, they're actually a Dutch media company.

Simon: Ah, Dutch. In that language Endemol is probably completely harmless.

Simon: Yes, but most Dutch people can speak English. I'm betting the name was chosen on purpose. Dutch people say 'die' all the time, they're evil. Sure in their language 'die' means 'that', but I think the Dutch just like telling people to die.

Simon: That's really offensive.

Simon: Yeah, and now I'm going to call someone stupid. There's a Youtuber analysing the body language of an escaping criminal, and he said that because the felon didn't look around much when escaping, that proved he was an impulsive person. However, if the Youtuber watched the whole footage, he would have seen another prisoner was looking out for him so the escaper didn't need to look around. Which was funny.

Simon: Great! And can you make a whole company look stupid?

Simon: I've done Endemol, so now I'll do Hyundai. There's an advert that goes 'it's the dawn of a new hyun-day'? Wow, a play on words. That's the only reason the brand changed the way its name is pronounced isn't it? I'm right aren't I? What was wrong with the old Hi-yun-dye? It's like Pepsi spending millions to slightly alter the shape of their logo, no one cares.

Simon: Ohhhhhhhh. That was cold!

Simon: Yeah. And now I'm out of things to say again, so...

Simon: So byeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeee.

Simon: Byeeeeeeee.