

Simon 1: Hello, Simon. Dare I ask if anything has confused you recently?

Simon 2: Yes, a burger CEO got lots of ridicule online for calling his burgers 'products'...

Simon 1: Hahahahahaha!

Simon 2: What's so funny?

Simon 1: Oh. I don't know.

Simon 2: Exactly, it isn't FREAKISHLY weird, is it? Some might say burgers actually are products...

Simon 1: Google?

Simon 2: Right, first up products are 'physical goods', making it look pretty good for the CEO right now. Now let's Google if burgers are indeed products...

Simon 1: Well?

Simon 2: Yes they are.

Simon 1: It's not as big a scandal as I first thought it was, and I'm sorry for laughing.

Simon 2: It's ok.

Simon 1: Out of curiosity, maybe Google things that AREN'T products?

Simon 2: Human emotions aren't products...

Simon 1: That would be a weird burger...

Simon 2: Yep. The sadness burger?

Simon 1: To be fair though, the happiness burger does sound like a legit name for a burger...

Simon 2: Yes, but not if the name is taken literally. Time isn't a product, either.

Simon 1: The time burger?

Simon 2: Yep. It sounds epic but again, it's impossible.

Simon 1: And have any prison sentences confused you?

Simon 2: Yes, I read someone was jailed for four years, and was banned from driving for four years and seven months. The thing is, you can't drive in jail, so really he was banned from driving for seven months. After his release, I mean.

Simon 1: Maybe you can drive short distances to the canteen and workout area?

Simon 2: I don't THINK so...

Simon 1: Google if you can drive in jail...

Simon 2: Nope, you can't.

Simon 1: So people really do have to walk to the canteen?

Simon 2: Well, jail is a punishment, isn't it?

Simon 1: There's punishment and there's being unreasonable.

Simon 2: I know.

Simon 1: What else can't you do in jail? Order pizza?

Simon 2: No, that WOULD be cruel.

Simon 1: Oh I know.

Simon 2: It's a huge security risk getting pizza deliveries into jail, but at least it's humane.

Simon 1: Do you have any prison insights you'd like to share?

Simon 2: I saw a Chinese or Japanese Youtuber say prison wine isn't actually that bad, whereas prisoners describe it as absolutely awful. I'm assuming the Youtuber doesn't mind the taste as she's used to eating rotten eggs as a delicacy.

Simon 1: Century eggs, you mean?

Simon 2: Yep. I mean they SOUND impressive, but really they're just eggs that are left on their own for ages and taste of pee.

Simon 1: It makes you wonder why they don't just boil eggs...

Simon 2: Yes, I really like rice and noodles, though.

Simon 1: Sometimes the simplest foods are the best...

Simon 2: Yes, like poppadoms! You certainly shouldn't eat just poppadoms though, otherwise I'm guessing you'll go blind from malnutrition.

Simon 1: Is 'poppadom blindness' a real condition?

Simon 2: I don't know. If it is, it probably isn't called that, it sounds too silly.

Simon 1: What should it be called, then?

Simon 2: I don't know. Maybe repetitive non food ingestion?

Simon 1: RNFI does sound more sensible, I agree with you.

Simon 2: Ah, Google says repetitive non food ingestion is called 'pica' and pica has nothing to do with eating too many poppadoms, it's eating things that are literally non foods, like bricks. That's much weirder.

Simon 1: Ok, how about calling the condition 'Repetitive non-nutritious food ingestion'? Or RNNFI?

Simon 2: Again, that's pica, apparently.

Simon 1: I wouldn't worry about it. Unless you start calling yourself a doctor, maybe.

Simon 2: THAT'S a crime...

Simon 1: How's your health?

Simon 2: Pretty good, considering all the pizza binges. I try not to eat too much though, I actually got into an argument with a chicken shop worker a few days ago, when I said I didn't want a free fizzy drink to go with my meal. She was like 'please take it!' then I said no again, then she said 'have some more chicken instead, then!!!' Then I said I wasn't hungry enough, and she was pretty much like 'take the chicken!!!' In the end I just accepted it, but it worked out for me as I was actually hungry enough for it.

Simon 1: Not another argument over too much food?

Simon 2: First world problems, I guess.

Simon 1: Yeah, it wouldn't make a good section of a standup routine in a homeless shelter...

Simon 2: You never know, maybe I would be giving the message that food isn't so good after all! That would cheer me up if I was really hungry...

Simon 1: Hm. It's just that talking about food alone in the presence of hungry people could stir up negative emotions...

Simon 2: Fair enough.

Simon 1: Was the chicken good?

Simon 2: Yes, very.

Simon 1: And that's the kind of thing you're considering complaining about in front of people living in poverty?

Simon 2: Yip.

Simon 1: Well don't.

Simon 2: Well, I'm not a standup comedian, so...

Simon 1: You don't like performing?

Simon 2: Nope. A shame really, as it has been suggest or at least implied I should give a TED talk about no good people turning their life around.

Simon 1: I see. And how's your mental health? Do you believe in any wacky conspiracy theories?

Simon 2: Nope! :D However, I have heard a genuine conspiracy theory about an American government worker or something like that, who had a rather inexpressive face and some people are saying she's a robot, which I found funny. It did look like that to be fair... She has a new fan! With a bit of luck she'll be leading the country after Donald Trump. A very calm person who doesn't let everyday facial expressions interfere with her work and the bigger picture.

Simon 1: What if she is actually a robot though?

Simon 2: Well, as she just stood in the background nodding her head, I'm not sure what the purpose of the robot would be.

Simon 1: Oh, there's a huge demand for nodding robots in America.

Simon 2: Really??? Why?

Simon 1: They just give people reassurance, that's all.

Simon 2: No way...

Simon 1: No, only joking.

Simon 2: I was going to say, people weren't saying she was giving reassurance, she just looked weird.

Simon 1: How would you feel if someone posted a video of you looking weird?

Simon 2: Pride?

Simon 1: And that's why she has a new fan?

Simon 2: Right, it's a good way to be. Also, if the trend caught on and everyone stopped having facial expressions, think how much simpler plastic surgery would be! You want to be able to smile properly in this era? Then such surgery may not be for you. If you want to look like a robot on the other hand? It's your lucky day.

Simon 1: Great, and is that all you have to say?

Simon 2: It is indeed, I hope it's been insightful.

Simon 1: Great, bye!