

(Raining sounds)

BEN: Hello, listeners! Because of the unforeseen events of our last broadcast, we had to hammer one of the station's walls down. Now there is nothing to shelter us from the rain.

JAMES: But the most important thing is, now I'm not stuck in the wall.

DAN: No, that's not the most important thing. At all. Actually we all liked how you were muted. It wasn't perfect, but it was an improvement.

BEN: It's also worth pointing out James is still a pigeon.

JAMES: There's really no cure?

DAN: No.

JAMES: But at least we've got chairs, right!

DAN: Woo.

JAMES: Arrrgh... Weee!... No!

DAN: Ben... Look at James.

JAMES: I've passed through the chair and am stuck, just like I passed through a wall not long ago!

DAN: Why does this stuff keep happening to you, James?

JAMES: I don't know!

BEN: You know what this means, James?

JAMES: What?

BEN: If you get approached by the foxes outside, you won't be able to fly away...

JAMES: Chase them!

DAN: It's the cycle of life. Everyone dies.

JAMES: You're going to die! Because of me!

DAN: Oh what, you're going to annoy me to death? We're all used to you now. You have no chance.

JAMES: I can try!

(A phone rings)

BEN: Hello?

CALLER: Hello, we had a little chat last podcast. I really would appreciate it, if I could speak to James.

BEN: Why?? He's a freak!

CALLER: It's for that very reason. Passing through objects AND turning to an animal? That's not normal.

DAN: But you said you'd hate the thought of studying him as he's so obnoxious!

CALLER: In all professions there are sacrifices one needs to make.

BEN: Do you have any idea what's going on with him?

CALLER: I'm not sure. Do you think it's possible your building and furniture was built by someone who wasn't fully qualified?

BEN: You're wondering if our building is made of sponge?

CALLER: It really is the most likely explanation. By far, in fact.

BEN: No. That's not the case at all.

JAMES: FOX!!!! A fox is crawling towards me!!

CALLER: Maybe your building was built by someone who was mentally deranged? Did James build your radio station?

BEN: God no!

JAMES: FOX!!!!!!!!!! If you let a fox kill me, you can't study me!!

CALLER: Not true, I can get a DNA sample. That's most of what I need.

JAMES: HELP!!!!

DAN: No one's going to help you, just shut up.

(A thunder clap is heard)

JAMES: Ow!

DAN: Lightning has just struck James!

JAMES: Argh!!

CALLER: James, why does this kind of stuff keep happening to you? Do you have any idea?

JAMES: Kill the fox!!!

CALLER: You can't kill foxes, James. It's animal cruelty.

JAMES: Killing me is cruelty!!

CALLER: Not so. Letting you die is just letting nature take its course. It's the cycle of life. You could even say it was an accident.

JAMES: You can't say it's an accident, because this show is being recorded! How much more proof do you need??

CALLER: You can't destroy this podcast's records, Ben?

BEN: I don't THINK so.

CALLER: Hm. That is a problem.

JAMES: Just chase the fox away!

CALLER: I guess you should...

BEN: Fine. Shoe, fox, shoe!!

FOX: (With a raspy voice) Fine, I'll go. Jeez.

CALLER: What was that?

DAN: (Frustrated) I don't know.

CALLER: It sounded like a fox just talked.

DAN: It did.

JAMES: Was telling the animal to go REALLY that hard?

BEN: That wasn't the point and you know it.

JAMES: I'm sick of this! We've done 25 podcasts now, and it's always the same! We just keep fighting for no reason whatsoever!

DAN: We just don't like the idea of helping you. That's all.

CALLER: Again, James, what do you think it is about you that defies physics? Do you have any idea?

JAMES: I'm very persistent... If I want to see if I can pass through walls, etc., I'm not going to stop trying.

CALLER: I see. Would you describe yourself as fan of Stephen Hawking, or would you say you have no interest in science?

JAMES: I have no interest. Other than hitting walls, of course.

CALLER: So you didn't even think deeply about about how you'd achieve your goal. That's very interesting.

DAN: No it isn't...

CALLER: It wasn't a compliment. To make an analogy, rats are interesting, too.

DAN: Ah.

CALLER: And what went through your mind when you passed through a wall for the first time?

JAMES: I'm not sure. I guess it was a mixture of horror and achievement.

CALLER: And what did you feel like you achieved?

JAMES: I powned Ben and Dan by proving them wrong.

DAN: What does any of this matter??

CALLER: Would it bother you if I said I wanted to ask James thousands of questions?

DAN: Yes!!

CALLER: Maybe I could just ask the most important one?

BEN: Go on, then.

CALLER: I want you to be honest with me, James...

JAMES: Go on...

CALLER: Your shifting from human to pigeon... Are you in fact, a shape shifting alien? Did you make up the man who dresses in a sausage roll costume and kills people?

JAMES: Nope.

CALLER: Hm. That was best question, and it got me nowhere...

JAMES: Powned.

CALLER: No you didn't pown me.

DAN: I'm sorry about James. He really is like this with everyone.

JAMES: I did a little.

CALLER: How did you pown me?

JAMES: I wasted your time. I confused you, too.

CALLER: Ben, Dan, here's what I want you to do...

BEN: What?

CALLER: When the show is over, put James in a cage. Then I want you to threaten him with weapons. That will get him talking as I pay him a visit. Now you can talk about Lego. It was nice talking to you. Bye.

BEN: So... Anyone ever seen Toy Story Lego?

DAN: Yes, once!

BEN: Great. That's all we have time for, so goodbye!

DAN: Maybe we should ask the producer for more time. We do have it in us to be relevant.

JAMES: No, I don't think so.

BEN: Agreed. Bye!