

Today, I'll be reviewing 'Wiped Out' by Raven! How would I describe it? Like a turbo version of Iron Maiden's 'Killers' album! I think that's a great way of describing it. You can't say my reviews have been dumbing down lately, now. Now let's talk about if my case is cracked. Nope, because it's cardboard. I'm glad I've got that out of my system, so I'll move on as promised a while ago. I like the album. It was actually ranked by someone as being the 494th best rock/metal album of all time. I'm wondering how many albums the reviewer has listened to. If you become an expert at something in 10,000 hours and albums last 1 hour (they're usually not so long, but let's not make this article TOO confusing) that suggests he's heard 10,000 albums. He could have listened to more but if so, he has less of a life than me and needs to go go-karting maybe. They may look slow, but they feel faster because you're so close to the ground. How does that sound? However, there are SO many more rock/metal albums out there. Hundreds of thousands if not more. What's my point? It's my way of bringing a pretentious person down and calling him a 'noob'. You can't possibly listen to that many, so he can't be a true expert can he? Take it.

For whatever reason, one track starts with someone (ironically) shouting 'STOP SHOUTING FOR 'FLIP'S' SAKE!' Only he didn't say 'flip'. :(As no one responded to the aggressor on the album, (possibly because they were too upset) it kind of made me feel like I was the one being shouted at. It was especially weird as no one did indeed shout beforehand. Anyway, as I am apparently the victim, first up I wasn't shouting, second even if I was, it's because YOU'RE annoying. Stupid too, you clearly don't understand the concept of hypocrisy. Maybe he was trying to be macho. Only when compared to today's standards, the album really isn't that heavy, if anything it's fun. Consequently, do you know what he should have shouted? 'PLEASE STOP TALKING, AND I'LL BUY YOU A PINT!' There's nothing wrong with friendliness. Shouted friendliness is a bit puzzling, but maybe the musicians have gone deaf. You have to be careful playing music so loud for so long. Do you really want a lifetime of tinnitus? If a friend decides to whisper 'HISSSS!' loudly in my ear for a minute I'd be annoyed, but for the rest of my life? I'd have to explain he's crossing a boundary and maybe it's best if we spend some time apart. I'm just saying it would be bad.

According to the internet at least, the top 500 albums actually has a list of 592 releases. The reviewer can't count properly? I know 592 is a reasonably high number, but the theory of counting so high really isn't that complicated. And it's such a strange mistake to make. If you really have difficulty counting, I'd expect someone to confuse the number '500' with maybe '400 and 100' or something like that. But confusing 500 with 592? How did that happen? And it's such a specific number, too. If someone asked me what my top ten albums were, I'd gladly tell the guy. But if he asked me what my top 592 were? What a weirdo... Oh I do apologise. (At least I think I do...) It SEEMS the extra 92 albums have been added by some mysterious person, not the reviewer. I don't know who and I don't know why, but there are some trolls out there who thrive on creating what they think is 'mystique.' To sum up, I'm not sure why I talked about go karting again here, it just seems there are some things on my mind that can't be held back. You and I both know that often has some pretty bad consequences. Luckily in this case, I would say they were very mild. :) What rating do I give the album? I like it almost as much as the internet and it's ten out of ten reviews, so let's say 9.5/10! Bye!