

You know when I said lucky 7 is evil because $1 + 6 = 7$, and that means the number one of evil = luck? Don't worry as I've just made a discovery! You see, the apparent Satanism SOUNDS bad of course it does BUT not if you're familiar with slang! The words 'bad', 'sick' and 'wicked' all paradoxically mean positive things and can replace the word 'evil'! Therefore $1 + 6 = 7$ means the number one of wicked = luck, i.e. the number one of amazingness = luck and who can disagree there?? Oh I am SO relieved. All this time I thought I'd been wishing myself ungodliness and had been siding myself with Lucifer over and over again! If I did side with him hypothetically speaking, my advice to others would be not to do the same as I wouldn't describe my dull situation as worth selling my soul for. The Devil would be like 'hey Simon, want to sell your soul? In reward I will give you as many hours behind a computer as you could possibly like, and I mean REALLY.' Who cares?

The soul selling could also explain the curing of my knee pain, but I thought I earned that for myself through gradual strengthening at the gym. An eternity in Hell or just a little patience and discipline - what would you choose? I at least thought I chose the latter and having thought about it, I think I did. Yes, I've never communicated with Satan in the traditional sense, but again you do have to be careful with what numbers you use. 7 is fine, that's just been proven, but you do have to be wary of the power of number 2, aka anger, and of course the number 6 when it is not part of another number, for example 7. 6 on its own? THAT'S Satanic. The only real thing you have to worry about when wishing someone luck is appropriate use of language. Would a super sensible 80 year old man appreciate being called 'wicked' or whatever even if it is cool? I think he'd prefer being called 'respected.' Luckily for him, young people say 'respect' a lot too, just not through numbers.

What about the number 8? $2 + 6 = 8$, or rather angry evilness = prosperity? Oh no. Again, don't worry! It actually means angry wickedness (or angry 'coolness') = prosperity. Yes being angry is a pain, but look on the bright side, people look up to you whilst you earn money! Who cares if you lose your temper at others whilst wearing shades, you could be a rapper, it's called 'a diss track'. Not a moral thing to do, but that's where the number 96 comes in, which of course means 'no evil'. You may want to follow the number 8 with 96 if you don't like the idea of becoming an offensive rapper but sadly in this day and age, there just doesn't seem to be any rappers who promote kindness. Maybe you have a musical vision that can change contemporary music? Then remember the number 896 and use it well. Lots of rappers have numbers in their name for whatever reason, how about something like 'Lil Angel 896'? Again for whatever reason, rappers can't seem to work out how to say 'little' (I think) properly. Why? I guess because they keep saying things so fast all the time. A harmless trend or even something to be admired? Nope, when it comes to things that are small (I think), it only results in confusion for me at least. What does 'lil' mean? Little, lily or lilac? Tell me!

Lastly, how do I explain $0 + 6 = 6$, or in other words, no evil = evil? Well, there is a joke South Park song that goes 'with no evil there can be no good, so it must be good to be evil sometimes.' Whether someone like the pope would fall for the joke, I don't know, it sounds unlikely to me but who knows, everyone needs time off work, right? Time off work for you may involve chilling out and watching TV, time off for the pope could involve stealing church donations for himself. He'd just be like 'Of course I'd never steal anything from 9 to 5, but you need rest, a builder needs rest, even the king needs rest, and my form of rest is petty thievery. And the South Park song said that would be ok.' I'm sure his fellow priests wouldn't put up with him if he took things further and mugged people but so that I don't have to write ANOTHER apology, the pope wouldn't do that. Again, like you and me he just needs time off. In comparison, what do doctors do in their free time? Heal MORE people? No, they get sick of it, so they encourage the eating of deep fried Mars Bars and usage of hard drugs. Ok, NOW I need to apologise. And on that sorry note... bye!
