

Hello, this time I would like to apologise for ruining Mr. Bean's reputation by suggesting he would be completely indifferent to various disasters, and would just smile and say 'Bean'. However, if you think that's offensive, here's my idea for the last ever Simpson's episode: Homer gets caught strangling Bart, and when Marge sees what's happening, Homer says 'Doh!' and in the end Marge asks for a divorce. Bart goes mad because of the stress of the situation and holds a store up with real gun and gets sent to a young offender's institution, where the guards beat him and the other inmates extort him. Not only that, the rest of his family cut off all ties with him and don't even bother writing to him. That's not funny... Bart would be like 'Lisa, you're very smart, you have to find a way of breaking me out of this place' but his sister changes her name and moves across the country to hide from the shame. Again, not funny. Bart would just say 'liiii didn't do it!!' with a cheesy grin on his face to lighten the atmosphere when he gets caught with prison wine, but he just gets beaten again. The kindhearted Ned Flanders does visit Bart on the other hand, but only to say to Bart 'You're dead to me'.

Simpsons creator Matt Groening probably shouldn't worry quite yet, but all Hell will break loose if A.I. ever turns evil and takes over the media. A prankster A.I. is a terrifying thought, as is A.I. handled by me. Luckily I don't know how to work with A.I., although I have put the thought of ruining The Simpsons out there, and for that here's a super sincere apology to Matt as well. Of course I'm not sorry enough to simply delete this monologue, but I am at least sorry enough to try and get myself out of trouble. Again, I am super sorry. Not as sorry as I'd be if I wrote an episode of The Simpsons where Homer kidnaps Moe, ties him up and beats him with a baseball bat. I suppose technically speaking, I've ruined the show already but you could say I've given depth to it, at very least? A program once thought of as 'light entertainment' has turned into something pretty deep. Maybe nonsensical, but maybe not if the writers of Breaking Bad got involved, that would be good. 'Breaking The Simpsons'! So called because Homer makes and supplies drugs and breaks into people's houses to batter them.

I wonder what my fixation on ruining things is about, I guess it's far easier to spoil something than improve it. How do you improve one of the most successful shows of all time? Wow, though one. How to spoil it on the other hand? Easy, turn once loved characters into maniacs, it really is that simple. The stars can con money out of their 'friends', then send them letters simply saying 'screw you', or you can make them tell others to eff off for no reason. Here's a twist, Homer could end up as a prison guard, just so he could beat Bart again, main characters are supposed to be loveable, at least in sitcoms. What kind of sitcom have I just described? Taking things further, not only can you make everyone evil, you can make them totally bizarre. Homer strangles Bart, Marge gets a divorce, then the two parents run a marathon for charity, celebrate Lisa's birthday together, then Homer becomes a Formula 1 champion of the world. THAT'S weird, though having said that, later episodes of The Simpson's aren't that much less out there.

Time to say sorry to Matt again, isn't it? Who am I to criticise him when Wiedemann Comedy favourite James Ziegler is far from rational? He's a freak, isn't he? How he got his own radio show is a mystery, I've had some mental difficulties and believe me, it's been tough. James isn't a F1 champion though, and if he ever strangled a child, I'd have a word with him, cover things up so I wouldn't look bad, and you'd never hear from him again. Who gets his show? The egg. Speaking of the egg, Charlie and Wendy Baldwin should be having their first child very soon! I asked what they would be calling it, and they suggested 'Dishwasher.' I explained that's a form of abuse despite immediately giving the mini egg a hard work ethic, they agreed and then suggested 'Henry'. Nothing wrong there, I think we can all agree. I asked 'You're not using 'Dishwasher' as a middle name, are you?' and they said 'No. Ben'. So, Henry Ben Baldwin, (AKA 'The Loved Egg') may there be many happy times ahead of you! Bye!