

Simon: Hello, Simon! I understand you'll be attending an online London Comedy Writer's meeting today?

Simon: I sure will be.

Simon: Looking forward to it?

Simon: Yes. But the thing is, there's this guy there calling himself 'Kimmy Kimmel Komedy', which would be bad enough, but he's using the initials. As the guy's black, that's certainly not a racist thing for him to say (I hope - maybe he hates himself), but you have to think of first impressions... As he's in charge of the thing, he's going to be one of the first guys people will see!

Simon: Oh my word...

Simon: Yes! As in welcome to the LCW meeting! But first, let's have a discussion...

Simon: That's dark.

Simon: I know! Personally, I'd have just called myself 'Kimmy'. A perfectly reasonable name. Kimmy Komedy works, too.

Simon: I'm reminded of KK Downing of Judas Priest...

Simon: And that's fine...

Simon: I pointed out to the apparently confused individual, that when he finds out the meaning of his initials, he'll be really embarrassed. But he ignored me.

Simon: Just in case he didn't know?

Simon: It's a possibility. However, as he keeps talking about racism, I don't think it's too likely.

Simon: You could know about racism, but not the organisation...

Simon: I knew about racism, before I knew about the group...

Simon: Well there you go, then.

Simon: I think I'm going to confront him about it.

Simon: What will you say this time?

Simon: I want to say 'Are you out of your mind??' but that could make him put his walls up. I think I need to be gentle with him.

Simon: And how would you do that?

Simon: Well singing a lullaby would be inappropriate...

Simon: Far too soft.

Simon: Exactly, and singing in general would be eccentric... Maybe a lighthearted anecdote would lighten the mood. Then when everyone on the call starts laughing, I say 'Now, Kimmy. your name...'

Simon: Do it.

Simon: Ummm....

Simon: You're nervous?

Simon: Yeah.

Simon: I suggest changing the subject.

Simon: I'm listening to AC/DC's latest album.

Simon: Good?

Simon: It's alright. The band certainly stick to a formula.

Simon: It must have sucked the way you needed to move your entire, well ordered CD collection as the band name is at the start of the alphabet?

Simon: Actually, no. By amazing luck my top shelf had a bit of extra space.

Simon: Great!

Simon: Yes, that has to be one of the highlights of the year!

Simon: Come on. How about the time a bee flew in your bedroom and you got rid of him/her without too much of a problem?

Simon: Touché. But I did say ONE of the highlights, not my only highlight.

Simon: Touche.

Simon: I understand this will be your last Wiedemann Comedy entry for a few days, as you have more music to review?

Simon: Yep. More black and death metal. Hopefully the material won't sound exactly the same as everything else, this time.

Simon: They're sticking to a formula...

Simon: Yes, but at least AC/DC started off with their own sound. Really the BM/DM acts are stealing a formula as well as sticking to it. Noobs. I listened to some Sum 41 earlier as well, but I had to stop, as it was too cheerful. It was actually upsetting for me.

Simon: Not pandemic music?

Simon: Not at all.

Simon: What is?

Simon: Alice in Chains is a good choice.

Simon: Is there ever a good time for Sum 41?

Simon: Na. Well maybe happy Christmases and happy birthdays. That's it.

Simon: What about pizza days?

Simon: You know me too well.

Simon: Do you have anything else on your mind?

Simon: You know? I think that's it for the next five days or so...

Simon: Nothing at all?

Simon: I've eaten too many crisps?

Simon: Nothing else?

Simon: I'll be eating a scone later?

Simon: Even though you've eaten too many crisps?

Simon: Exercise.

Simon: Ah.

Simon: Ho hum...

Simon: Hum.

Simon: Er...

Simon: Bye.

(A DAY PASSES).

Simon: No wait! How did the call go?

Simon: Not bad. I didn't see Kimmy, so I couldn't have warned him, but I didn't really want to tell him anyway.

Simon: Ok. How was your scone?

Simon: Yep. Pretty good.

Simon: Anything else on your mind?

Simon: One last thing: You get given a password to join the call in a special LCW meeting email, but you ALSO get given the password in the LCW Facebook page, and you don't actually need to enter it anyway.

Simon: So what's the point of the password?

Simon: Exactly.

Simon: Wow. Is that all you have to say?

Simon: Yip. Bye!
