

Here's something I typed on my computer note pad a while ago: 'Stone Roses theory is complete nonsense'. Does that mean anything to you, because I've forgotten what I meant, I wish I clarified things. I mean I don't remember them challenging any of Einstein's theories or anything like that, and even if they did, I wouldn't be qualified to comment on the updated theory either. Unless the band said something like 'you think people can't travel faster than the speed of light? Well, watch THIS...' and then the band run about 10 mph. Oh NOW I remember what my comment meant! You know the Stone Roses song that goes 'I don't need to sell my soul, he's already in me? I wanna be adored'? Well, APPARENTLY the lyrics mean something like 'if you want other people to like you, other people think you're the devil' or something like that. Yep, sounds like nonsense to me. Let's just check if that was indeed what the song is supposed to mean, just so I don't have to do ANOTHER apology. Whoops, A.I. says it means something like 'wanting to be adored too much is a sin, like gluttony.' I guess that makes more sense, it seems I misunderstood what the singer meant. The lyrics are deep even, the song came out way before Facebook and its issues with narcissism, well done them. I don't really have a problem with arrogance though, as I never post pictures. Though to be honest, that's only so I don't post a picture of me looking stupid or angry. In the pic I settled on, my eyes look beady enough as they are.

Having said that, A.I. is supposed to be intelligent, so it is possible it improved the song's meaning so the so called 'intelligence' doesn't come across as dumb. Whatever the case, I usually like to make up song meanings for myself and my interpretation of the track is more literal. Whatever it's about, it's a great song and I think that's all that matters! Well pretty much, anyway. I suppose a superb track could be ruined by terrible lyrics, now that I think of it. For example The Beatles classic 'Yesterday' could go something like this: 'Yesterday, all my troubles seemed so far away, now jester has doubled the hay today'. It sounds cold as the musicians had known each other for so much of their lives, but the lyricist HAS to get sacked in that example. This sounds crazy, but whoever designed the cover art of their completely blank 'White Album' was equally talentless. Or as a pretentious person would say 'minimal'. Against all reason, he seemed to have found further success when he came up with Metallica's 'Black Album'. To be fair though, on that LP cover there is a snake as well, it's not completely one colour like TWA, but I'm guessing he got someone else to draw the animal. But he did most of the work by coming up with an album that's almost all black, right? Well done. What happened to art? It used to be really impressive, then someone displays an unmade bed as art, and that caught on? To be fair though, it is deep as I'm sure the person who produced the 'art' hates doing any work, including tidying.

This theory might seem a little wild to you, but here goes... The artist just mentioned was Tracy Emin. Her parents had great dreams of her being an outstanding artist, in particular they wanted her to paint water scenes, even more in particular, they wanted her to 'trace the sea', so much so that's what they named her. However, tracing the sea is completely impossible obviously, so she gave up altogether and produced 'works of art' she is actually capable of. It's a weird theory, isn't it? And here I am criticising The Stone Roses? If anything them running faster than the speed of light makes more sense, you just need to train really, really hard. Apparently not according to Einstein, but I say stick with it, you'll at very least end up becoming physically healthy. No actually, I've changed my mind, you CAN'T run faster than the speed of light. Not only would saying that give false expectations to the band, NASA will be disappointed with them, too. They'd be like 'This is the most important discovery of all time, this runner can take us across the galaxy!' No, but he CAN run to the shops if need be. I'm not going to apologise about my crazy theory I quickly debunked though, I think I've done that enough, for now. Oh wow, I just Googled who did the White Album cover, expecting to see an artist behind lots of REAL projects and I was told it was designed by Richard Hamilton in collaboration with Paul McCartney! TWO people had to design the thing??? THAT'S mad. And that's all I have to say, so bye!