

I'll say it again, any metal band with any form of the word 'death' in their name, be it def, deph, etc., hasn't been creative. The fact Deftones simply repeated their name on one of their album titles is particularly troubling. BUT whilst this isn't my favourite Deftones album, it is still awesome, and it's my most played of the group. Why don't I play my favourite album more? Because I hate it. No only joking. That would be a perplexing statement. If you're one of those people who has to fully understand a sentence before he moves onto the next, I can only apologise for the stress I must have caused you. I hate to say this, but I could have made you unlearn part of the English language and made you dumber. Soz. A similar thing happens to me when I see a clueless driver. Anyway, the real reason I don't play masterpiece 'White Pony' endlessly, is I guess it would be overstimulation. THAT makes sense. I don't play my least favourite album all the time, though. That could suggest something is wrong with me. Or rather something ELSE is wrong with me. Quite the list I'd be building, but luckily I don't care. Call me a hoarder. :D

The electronic track 'Lucky You' whilst not exactly the best song on the album is a masterpiece when compared to 'Pink Cellphone'. (By the same band on a different album, I haven't been random again). Coming up soon are some of its words. I would say 'lyrics', but there's no kind of tune, so... And it's not even rap as there is no distinct rhythm. You'd think that would be bad enough, but here goes: 'I can't stop you. X your eyes. Let the tape roll. Aren't you gonna get sick? 'Cause that's right, good work! I know you're wondering 'what in God's name is that supposed to mean?' We all are. The song is genuinely awful. Here are some more words 'Pursuing the wrong ideals and goals (I assume creative goals - it's a valid theory as any) that leads you into sickness'. Maybe not sickness in this case, just gibberish.

Oh I do apologise for my earlier writing. After doing some research, I've just found out 'def' doesn't refer to death in this case, but the paradoxical slang word meaning 'excellent'. As in 'we're all going to die, great!' But how was I supposed to know that? Def is SO metal. It's like a thug saying 'I'm gonna mess you up'. Of course it would be assumed he wants to attack you, but ACTUALLY, he wanted to go on a drinking binge with you. Not so bad and it does make sense - alcohol does mess you up. There are lots of funny slang words. Interestingly 'sick' also means good, just not as good as def. There are some morbid people out there. Another troubler is 'lit' which apparently means 'amazing'. I don't think I'd trust anyone who loves fire that much, certainly not someone who likes starting them. Next up, 'salty' means 'angry'. Salt is actually one of the most popular food enhancers there is. Further evidence of some kind of pleasure-pain reversal. OMG makes sense though. Simply 'Oh my God'. I like that one.

Back to the album in question! Interestingly, song 'Anniversary of an Uninteresting Event' is one of the weaker and more uninteresting tracks. How very honest. I've never heard of a band calling one of their filler tracks 'Filler'. You can get tired of rap artists boasting how great they are when they never do a single thing that's nice. This may be very offensive to music artists, but I wonder if Ted Bundy could have released a successful rap album. He was clearly a narcissist and he clearly didn't do anything that was nice. If you're wondering what my obsession with the guy is (I think I've mentioned him three times now), I just think he's just the funniest serial killer. He looks so sensible. Again, it would be like you school headmaster going on the rampage.

In conclusion, a very good album! I don't know why track 'Hexagram' was made a single, as it's one of my least favourite tracks on the release, but if PINK CELLPHONE was ever made a single? I genuinely think my ultra-specialist 'woo music' is better. Seriously, listen to the song on Youtube. Actually, listen to the band's best songs first (e.g. 'Knife Party') so your first impression of the band isn't ruined forever. From what I can tell, the song isn't even about a pink cellphone. Of course no one could possibly know what the song is about, so maybe it is, but on my homepage, do I say 'Hey, check out my tunes, first thing you do!?' No. I hate to sound attention seeking, but I advertise my best stuff first. I don't even mention my music, as quite frankly it embarrasses me, but I enjoyed writing it at the time. So, what's the score? Well, I think 9.5 is too low and 9.75 is too high. I'm not being pretentious when I give the detailed score of 9.65 out of 10. Bye!
