

Last time I reviewed 13 random words, and I quite rightly described that as 'extreme'. Where do I go from there? 14 words? Ha. How about 15? I'm not calling this monologue 'Random Words Ultra' for no reason, this is REALLY intense. You may not be able to handle it and you may suffer heart palpitations and a high temperature, so you may have to stop reading after the more usual ten examples. However, the hardcore will be rewarded, I think. What word is the worst on the list? Let's find out now!!

Cutting

Sure you can cut something in a benign way, such as a piece of paper, but you can also cut something (or someone) in a not so benign way and for that reason cutting has to be my least favourite of the words here. And even cutting paper harmlessly really doesn't interest me at all. Cutting Christmas wrapping paper is an exception, but I only do that one day a year. Therefore, there's a one in 365 chance I like cutting things. Big woop.

Courtesy

Yes, yes, yes, this word is ranked very low. But at least I prefer it to cutting people. Imagine if I didn't, right? Psychooooo. Sure you shouldn't be rude to people you like, but say you're shopping on holiday on the other side of the world and no one has a mobile phone to film you. Is rudeness to a shopkeeper wrong in that situation? I would say no.

Mature

I do some mature things like wear a seatbelt and use my mirrors before making a turn, but that's about it. I may seem immature to you, but my idea of the word is a super small time criminal who sadly just has a few more days to live. (Car crash). The English language is a complicated thing evidently, partly because of me.

Routine

Again, I do like SOME routine such as eating tasty foods, but checking my doors are locked, etc.? Nope. As the years have gone by, my extreme need for peace of mind has reduced at least a little bit, but still in a perfect world computers would do that stuff for me. That's saying quite a lot as I don't trust computers either.

Classify

You know what? Classifying things isn't so bad. I like trying to work out what Myers Briggs personality type people are, even if Google calls the typing a pseudo science. That's obviously annoying, but come on there has to be SOME truth to the system. There are introverts and extroverts, right? Look me in the eyes and tell me that's wrong.

Tiptoe

I guess being able to tiptoe like a ballerina would be cool, but I'd imagine I'd get bored of it pretty quickly. Not like backflipping, but backflipping sadly wasn't one of the words the generator came up with. Even cartwheeling would be pretty cool, but I've just never worked the technique out. :(

Era

Things are getting more interesting now. The eras of rock and heavy metal? Fascinating stuff. But the eras of window making for example? Very dull. I guess it's interesting how glass is made from sand and sand isn't see through, but do I want to read a book about that? Can't say I do.

Doctor

Of course doctors are important but do I want to see them? NO! It goes both ways though, as doctors usually don't want to see me. Take the power back. Don't say that though, as you'll only get more attention from such people.

Studio

Never have I felt anxiety entering a studio. Then again, never has a studio treated me for mental health problems. I hate to sound cold and ungrateful, but now I'm on my medication I don't really need doctors any more. I need the people delivering my meds, but do I need people telling me I need to take my pills? Not really. So let's go our separate ways and we'll both be happy!

Herb

Mm, herbs. Parsley, sage, rosemary and thyme? Healthy foods, great folk song. Scarborough Fair? A song about healthy products AND war? Name one other song that is so varied. On second thoughts, maybe I should put Scarborough Fair high on this list and not herbs as I don't like the taste. Oh yeah, that wouldn't be random and it would be cheating. Let's be mature, it's much better than stabbing people!!

Debut

A word full of promise and excitement. Most debut albums from a band are their best. Not always, but more often than not. Debut is also an interesting word in that it sounds like 'day boo', i.e. the disapproval of daytime. I wouldn't say the day is morally wrong so I don't exactly DISAPPROVE of it, but I do prefer nighttime.

Emphasis

This word is strange. Google says words similar to it include 'importance', 'stress', 'weight', and 'attention.' I mean I like the sound of importance, but stress not so much, so emphasis can't rank TOO highly. Am I an attention seeker? I don't think so.

Communication

Communication? With who? A devil worshipper? Thankfully most people aren't devil worshippers so you can take your chances, I'm just saying the word isn't perfect. I'm wondering if in the case I hadn't talked to someone for 1,000 years (hypothetically speaking) I'd like to talk to such a person, simply out of desperation. You never know, maybe he'd talk about normal things such as tea and biscuits. You can't keep talking about one thing without getting bored.

Explicit

This word isn't always naughty, it can also mean 'clear and exact.' Please don't think I put this word so high up because I'm some kind of porn loving pervert, I'm just saying I like things to be clear. 'Explicit' can also refer to graphic violence. I most definitely don't prefer that to courtesy, maturity, herbs, etc.

Property

Even owning properties in Monopoly is fairly satisfying, imagine owning a train station in real life! On second thoughts, what would be the point? So I'm saying I value pointless properties more than communicating with people? No! Just most people, that's all. Is owning a train station better than talking to a devil worshipper? Tough one. I mean all that responsibility or being freaked out for a couple of minutes or so? Who knows.

Right, 15 words! Where do I go from there? 16 words? Long time readers of this site will know 16 means the number one of being evil, so maybe 17 words would be better. (The number one of luck). You know a number that really sucks? 26. Or angry evil. If you have no idea what I'm talking about, never mind. Bye!
