Isn't it nice how Dick Van Dyke is almost 101 years old and in such good health? He certainly smiles a lot more than me. I do of course enjoy eating pizza but I don't smile whilst eating as it's impossible. Not that I'd want to, as I'd look mentally ill and threatening. Why? I don't know, because in actuality, I'm only a threat to bread, tomato and cheese! I'm happy after my gym workout I suppose, but even then I don't really smile, I just say either 'woo' or even better, 'boo'. Like all art, my music is based on real experiences. Now, of COURSE he isn't going to live forever but at the same time, it is kind of looking that way. Part of the reason he's so healthy is because of his frequent exercise. I exercise frequently, too! Of course I do, I just said I did! Why did I do so twice? I must be really proud of the amount of exercise I do? It certainly looks that way, but in this case my strange writing is the result of throwing various ideas out there and a lack of planning in my writing. You may have noticed my writing lacks structure, too. Anyway, I'd like to live to 101 as well, if I died young in a car crash that would really annoy me, as it would mean all the time I spend working out would be a waste! It's like someone studying super hard all his life and graduating from Harvard at the age of 21. Then he falls down the stairs, hits his head hard and forgets everything. NO! Fortunately, you can't fall down the stairs, put on weight and lose muscle mass but you can fall down the stairs and die.

I was going to call this monologue 'Will Dick Van Dyke Ever Die?' but that sounded aggressive, explaining my title 'Immortality?' I don't mean to get Dick's hopes up though, maybe he will indeed die someday… I could say 'I hope he dies' so he can one day go to Heaven but that of course sounds aggressive, too. David Attenborough is 100 as well and this may sound wild, but who knows, maybe he'll live forever. Again, the evidence suggests that's what's already happening. It's cool there is a boat named after him called 'The Sir David Attenborough', as well. Like most of those who voted for the boat's name, I preferred Boaty McBoat Face, not just because it sounds better but as David is now very old, he probably can't swim anymore. Would you feel safe on a boat inspired by someone who can't swim? Ever heard of self-fulfilling prophecies? If you have, you'll know the Sir David Attenborough is highly likely to crash into a rock or get torpedoed. What would such a prophecy be for BMBF? Nothing harmful, you'll just get a boat with a face. On the plus side though, a different boat was called 'Boaty McBoat Face' as a compromise. Not the main boat, but it'll do for me. I get it, BMBF sounds very silly but rules are rules, if a name gets voted as the most popular, that should be respected. With the naming of the boat, what has actually happened is an F-you to democracy. Next thing you know, there are no more votes for boat names and the world goes to Hell.

Have you ever noticed how Dick Van Dyke's initials are DVD? So if you ever hear someone say 'DVD player', it could refer to a device used for playing DVDs or it could refer to Dick Van Dyke being a 'player' and chatting people up! Wow, he's going to live forever and he has a wild and fun personality, too. Maybe that's the secret of his long life, which is worrying for me as I don't even smile when eating pizza. However, I do smile inside, obviously. David Attenborough's initials are perhaps more interesting. DA can refer to Dumbledore's Army?? That's what Google says! As Dumbledore is a wizard and wizards are magic, maybe David is immortal because he's magic, too? Yep, I'm calling Sir David Attenborough a wizard! I'm also suggesting he has an army. What he plans to do with it, I have no idea… Maybe he's planning on building a huge fleet of ships but of course, no ships will be called 'Boaty McBoat Face'. Well not the main ones, anyway. Can you imagine Winston Churchill's warships being called ‘HMS Boaty McBoat Face’? Because I can’t. No you know what? Actually, I can. Call me naive, but I think the enemy would be scared, especially when they see the huge eyes and nose floating towards them. I should point out DA can also refer to ‘Development Approval’ which is fitting as you’d need a lot of development approval building such a boat in wartime. And that’s it, bye!