

Today, I'll be reviewing 'Midas' by Wunderhorse. At first I thought Wunderhorse was a real German word (it's not), next thing I know, I find out the name was meant as a joke that was inspired by the TV show 'Champion the Wonder Horse'. Oh so I'm part of a joke now? How's that supposed to make me feel?? The band might as well be called 'Wunderhorzenegger'. I'd probably believe that was real German too, and that it means something random like wonder mixed with I don't know, a mobile phone or whatever, hahahaha. Only it's not funny is it? It's nothing more than a cross between Wonder and Arnold Schwarzenegger. Midas is a real word though, it means 'the ability to make money out of anything one undertakes.' Oh if only they didn't earn money by mocking me, I feel so low. It could be worse though, the track listing could include songs such as 'Schimon Iz Unt Idiot'. We all know what that means and we all know it isn't real German. Apart from of course, me.

Here are some real tracks in the LP. First up is 'Arizona'. Call me paranoid, but are the band trying to convince me Arizona is in Germany? They just can't stop themselves, can they? Is it because Arizona has a Germanic 'z' in it? Is that how the band think they can trick me? Same goes with track 'Silver', we all know how much Germans love the letter 'v'. 'Ich bin Arizona silver, jaaa!' Don't be fooled, that was nonsense. Their previous album has a track called 'Atlantis' which is an even more daring way of tricking me, as the name has no v OR z. God I hate these people, do they really think they can make me think Atlantis is in Germany, too?? Yeah, and London is in Germany as well, in fact I've been living in Germany my whole life! And Germany is in Spain. You know what REALLY screws with me? Wikipedia says the band are from the UK and they play Americana music. Ah America, home of French baguettes and Italian pizzas. You know what, I'm not even going to comment any more on that, I'm just going to move on. It's easy to see how the band have got so much attention, what a shame they have found success so dishonestly.

Band member Jacob Slater once worked as a surfing instructor. You know why I think that is? The band may try, but it's actually very difficult to convince someone Spain is in the UK for example as the scenery is so different. So if you DO have crazy and wacky urges like that, your best bet is to work on the water as water is exactly the same all around the world. He has also worked as an actor, proving he has it in him to convince others of things that simply aren't true. A bizarre psychological profile sure, I can only speculate why he acts this way. If I had to guess, I'd say he did poorly in geography in school and can't handle it when others are better at him at the subject. Maybe that's why he likes the word 'Midas' so much. It sounds cool and is something to be respected, but is it a realistic description for someone like him? He sounds a bit... mental.

Changing the subject a little, I Googled the news and there was the headline 'AI cracks superbug problem in two days that took scientists years.' Wow, who is this impressive Alan? He sounds amazing. Then for the hundredth or so time in my life, I realised it should have said 'A.I.' as in Artificial Intelligence. Ah, the main flaw of the English language, I looks exactly like I. Sort it out! On the plus side, an inspiring story! Me and A.I. are fierce rivals most of the time, but I did like that. I wonder how A.I. could improve Wunderhorse. It could at very least correct the spelling mistake and call the band 'Wonder Horse.' Sounds simple, but it would prevent a hell of a lot of pain! But of course, Wunderhorse WANT to cause me pain which is why they suck so much. BUT... how is their music? Forget their sick goals. Well actually, I think it's rather good and I give Midas a solid 8.75 out of 10!
