

Welcome to my fourth Q&A! Obviously I can't top talking to people in parallel universes like I did last time, but I can still respond to people from miles around. Let's go!

First we have a question from Plagiarising Pete from Sillydelphia: Do you have any new ideas for a sketch?

Simon: I kind of do. I have a few sentences, but I don't know what to do with them. Check this out...

Teacher: 'What does 'ambiguous' mean?' Student: 'I don't know, it could mean anything'. Teacher: 'Yes!' Student: 'What?'

Simon: Great stuff. It sounds like the kind of thing that could have already been done before, though.

Danny Downer, Downtown: What's the worst bit of writing you've ever done?

Simon: I recently wrote a whole paragraph that turned out to be complete gibberish. Someone reading it could assume I had dementia. I guess they're the perils of writer's block mixed with music on in the background. It can be very hard to concentrate in such frustrating and distracting circumstances. Well that's what I tell myself.

Danny: Can i have a read of that paragraph, please?

Simon: Actually you can! I saved my first draft, here goes! :D

...

However, most of the video can't possibly have anything to do with me. Particularly the bits about being bitter or an anglophobe. They really wouldn't make sense when directed, would they? Though I may hate England if I ever go ment... No! I mean I may be hateful if I ever get sad and disillusioned?? That's a lot more benign. I also don't write about being sad too much, so it's a double whammy. But let's face it, the best bands in the world come from England (apart from Deftones), so how can I be blue? I hinted that the UK is best musically in my conversations with HH, but did they celebrate Black Sabbath/Iron Maiden/Judas Priest/Motorhead/The Stone Roses in their work? Nope. -_- Maybe they will in their upcoming video which I suggest they should call 'Simon'. No. THAT'S overbearing. Or maybe HH just need guidance. That doesn't sound so bad. Anywho, check out the video in question, below!

Danny: What's it mean?

Simon: I don't know.

Creepy Nighttime Stalker, A Few Blocks Away: Do you sometimes get ideas in your sleep?

Simon: Yes! But they're rarely any good, and I don't usually remember them: Check this one out...

Hotel reviewer: (Complaining) 'The duvets didn't smell of ham. I always loved the smell of ham on a duvet.'

Simon: That's it. It's an interesting thought maybe, but it shouldn't really be the basis of a whole sketch/short story.

Stalker: Do your pillows smell of ham, by any chance?

Simon: I don't think so...

Stalker: That's random.

Shifty Shawn, Jail: Have you ever been accused of a crime?

Simon: Yes, a few years ago someone thought I was trying to steal a CD because I thought the shop keeper handed me the album back to me after I gave it to him. Turns out I never handed it to him, and then I carried it out of the shop. :(But all ended well. I much more recently dropped a supermarket cake on the floor by accident and didn't ask for another one. That could have made it look like it wasn't an accident, but actually it was. I just decided I didn't want the sugar. Though those thoughts didn't last long - I quickly bought a chocolate bar from somewhere else :S

Conner the Confused, SOMEWHERE in England :S : What's the most confusing acronym you've seen?

Simon: Most people associate the SAS with the special air service, but there's also a (company? or is it a group?) called the Scottish ambulance service. I guess it would be cool if either SAS treated me for a broken leg or whatever, but it could be hard to explain to others.

Daft Danielle, Danmark: If you could be one household item, what would you most like to be?

Simon: I'm very kind to my guitars. If my instruments get chipped, I get annoyed so they have nothing to fear.

Daft Danielle: If you could be any household item, what would you least like to be?

Simon: The pens and pencils I own have a very short life expectancy. I can be very unfair to them. Unless they're particularly reliable, they're most likely to get snapped. Other pens/pencils get chewed on. It's just a hard life for them.

Wacky Wilma, Space!: Here's a thought: Is it ram page or ramp age?

Simon: I'm not sure. I always thought it was one word...

Wilma: No, I don't think so.

Simon: Well, it's ramp age, isn't it then? (As in the age of ramps). Rams can't draw so they have no need for pages.

Wondering William: What's the best multiple choice question you've seen?

Simon: None are sticking out to me right now, so let's make one up. Imagine this is in a driving test theory exam:

Which of the following is best? Considerate driving, creative driving, funny driving, mental driving?

Truth Seeking Tracy, Waiting in line at the job centre: Do petrol stations make money when it's 3 or 4 am, or whatever?

Simon: I always wondered that. Surely the cost of hiring the staff means they lose money at those times...

Tracy: A life saver if you run out of petrol in the early morning, though...

Simon: Of course, of course.

Boastful Ben, right next to Big Ben: If there's one thing you could tell the world, what would it be?

Simon: Lewis Hamilton is the fastest driver on Earth. (And he's British).

Ben: Lewis Hamilton again?

Simon: I've already done a whole interview about him, haven't I? But to be fair, he was actually born about 50 miles away from me, so you could make an argument that I live in the fastest area in the world. Just saying.

Lewis Hamilton, 50 miles away: Thanks for bigging me up, man...

Simon: No probs!

Normal Ben, Hobbiton: What's the weirdest thing that's happened to you, today?

Simon: When I was about to get out of my car, I saw a car parked right behind me that looked exactly (ok a little bit) like mine. For a good two seconds, I thought it was mine and I was driving the wrong vehicle. :(

Let's be Rational, London: What do you think of people who think the country needs a more passionate prime minister?

Simon: People often say at least dictators believe in their country and are willing to do something about it. I don't really agree with them, as dictators can actually be incredibly dangerous. Interestingly I know of no calm dictators. Just saying.

Ok, that's my fourth Q&A session done! What will I talk about next time? No idea.

Thank God I'll be taking a short break from my site soon, as I'll be reviewing more music! Phew! Byeeeeeee.