

Simon 1: Hello, have you been having trouble with your AdSense account, again?

Simon 2: Apparently. My site's adverts seem to work for me, though...

Simon 1: What do you mean by 'apparently'? You're not sure?

Simon 2: No, I'm not sure, I'm not sure at all!

Simon 1: And why is that?

Simon 2: I barely understood a word in the warning message I received. Total gibberish...

Simon 1: For the third time, now?

Simon 2: Yes, the trilogy!

Simon 1: It sounds epic, you should write three novels about the situation...

Simon 2: Yes, but I would understand them.

Simon 1: Why do you think you got the message?

Simon 2: At first I thought I was cancelled because of something James had said. I was thinking 'Oh no... He's gone too far.' Then I checked my site and my adverts were all fine, then I checked my AdSense account and was told I had no policy violations, so make of that what you will.

Simon 1: Maybe it has nothing to do with what James has said?

Simon 2: Well, the error message mentioned 'strings'... When have I ever talked about strings on my site?? As in blog 604, the time I bought some string!

Simon 1: I can see you blogging about that...

Simon 2: Me too, but I didn't.

Simon 1: So you're just going to ignore the AdSense message?

Simon 2: Mmhm.

Simon 1: It could be important...

Simon 2: And when have strings been important?

Simon 1: String theory suggests strings are a fundamental part of the universe...

Simon 2: If I ignore the message, the universe could end?

Simon 1: Maybe, yeah.

Simon 2: Well why am I being trusted to save the universe??

Simon 1: You do seem like an unlikely superhero...

Simon 2: Why then??

Simon 1: I don't know... I guess Stephen Hawking is dead and you're the most logical replacement...

Simon 2: 'Simon 2 saves the universe after fixing mysterious WiedemannComedy string issue'?

Simon 1: It's a hell of a headline...

Simon 2: It is, isn't it? I want to save the universe, now...

Simon 1: You only want to save the universe if it makes you look impressive?

Simon 2: No, that sounds bad...

Simon 1: It's what you implied.

Simon 2: I can prove it's not what I implied actually, because if I didn't save the universe, I'd die too, wouldn't I?

Simon 1: Well, at first you implied fame is much more important to you. You just now implied fame is more important than your own life. It wasn't a mistake, what it actually shows is EXTREME narcissism.

Simon 2: You what?

Simon 1: You heard.

Simon 2: I'm warning you, that was an awful thing to say.

Simon 1: I'm sorry.

Simon 2: You're going to write a full apology?

Simon 1: No, that's your job.

Simon 2: You can try.

Simon 1: No. If you hate this topic so much, change the subject.

Simon 2: Alright, I will.

Simon 1: Not numberplates, again.

Simon 2: How did you know?

Simon 1: Oh God.

Simon 2: No, this is a really good one: I saw a numberplate that looked almost exactly the same as 'Kiss Butt'.

Simon 1: Really??

Simon 2: Almost exactly the same. Intentional or not, I have no idea. If not... well, poor guy.

Simon 1: I'd say he'd be a poor guy if the numberplate WAS intentional...

Simon 2: Low self-esteem?

Simon 1: Right.

Simon 2: I won't bring up EVH numberplates again...

Simon 1: Oh good.

Simon 2: But I thought I saw a car called 'EVH00.' Ooh, the Eddie Van Halen car? I'd like one of those. Then I realised it said EV400.

Simon 1: That must have been hard for you...

Simon 2: Oh very much so. I saw a numberplate saying EVJ which was wrong obviously, but in foreign languages I think the J and H have the same pronunciation...

Simon 1: You said you wouldn't bring up EVH numberplates again!

Simon 2: No, it said EVJ.

Simon 1: Argh!

Simon 2: Here's a massively different subject: There's a Metallica song that goes 'Burning in my brain, I can feel the pain'. It's not true, you can't feel your brain. In fact, I think is the only organ you can't feel...

Simon 1: And to think Metallica were once a respected band...

Simon 2: Yeah, not anymore.

Simon 1: What's the song about?

Simon 2: Being executed by an electric chair...

Simon 1: Why not mention his burning skin?

Simon 2: Exactly. 'Burning in my skin, I can feel the throbbing.'

Simon 1: Is 'throbbing' synonymous with pain?

Simon 2: Google says it is...

Simon 1: Oh. Well there you go then.

Simon 2: Now all I have to do is email Metallica.

Simon 1: What will you say?

Simon 2: I'll just point out brains can't feel pain. Then I'd say 'goodbye'.

Simon 1: And you think he'll listen to you?

Simon 2: I guess... I guess maybe he could think I was a mentally ill weirdo.

Simon 1: But at the same time, they DO need to be corrected...

Simon 2: Yes, otherwise children wanting to be future brain surgeons will get the topic all wrong. As in 'Question 1: Do brains feel pain?' Then the now grown up child says 'Yes, it can sense burning, Metallica says so.' Who'd want anything to do with him?

Simon 1: Imagine if he passed, somehow...

Simon 2: Yes, when operating on someone's brain, he'd be like 'Where's the morphine?? Do you WANT this person's brain to feel burning??? Have you even listened to Metallica???'

Simon 1: Wow. I'd imagine he'd cause a TON of confusion.

Simon 2: It must never happen.

Simon 1: So email Metallica...

Simon 2: It's the right thing to do, isn't it? Especially as I once fell off my bike and got a concussion, myself.

Simon 1: And what are your thoughts on the letter X?

Simon 2: I've always been indifferent to the word 'zero', then I heard the company Xero say their own name (after pointing out it's spelt with an X), then I thought the word sounded really cool...

Simon 1: X is a powerful letter...

Simon 2: Yes, but WHY?

Simon 1: I have no idea...

Simon 2: Sadly it's too late to change my site name to Wiedemannxomedy.com...

Simon 1: I wouldn't be that sad, it doesn't make sense.

Simon 2: No it doesn't make sense, but it LOOKS cool.

Simon 1: It does, doesn't it?

Simon 2: I want an X-ray.

Simon 1: Why?

Simon 2: Because of the x...

Simon 1: Well, you're going to the dentist soon, hopefully you'll get an X-ray then.

Simon 2: I do often get X-rays at the dentist...

Simon 1: Very exciting.

Simon 2: I was nervous before, now I can't wait.

Simon 1: Why do you get given X-rays, anyway?

Simon 2: I don't know. Surely my teeth aren't that yellow...

Simon 1: Do you want teeth whitening?

Simon 2: I do actually, but I'll leave it. Apparently the whitening effects last from 3 months to 3 years depending on your diet and stuff like that.

Simon 1: And how's your diet?

Simon 2: Not so good.

Simon 1: The effects will last three months, then?

Simon 2: In my case? Probably less.

Simon 1: There's no point, then?

Simon 2: Exactly. And on that happy note... bye!