

Hello! As I'm typing this up, my internet isn't working so I can't research hobbies and discuss them. Consequently the wholesome activities I come up with for myself may be a little weird. But who cares? Let's go!

Air punching

Could be seen as exercise, aggression or even the attacking of hallucinations. Either of the three could be very useful in the right circumstances. You have to stand up to ghosts even if they're not real. Here's a thought: Does air punching help combat stormy weather or does it make the situation slightly worse? My thinking is worse, sadly. By that I mean punching air causes wind. I wonder if storms increase in fight tournaments??? No. Silly.... .. Is it?

Banana peeling

Strangely satisfying. Perhaps not TRULY fun, but I can imagine desperate people in solitary confinement getting something out of it. Stop the hole, it's torture!

Car licking

Mmm. Love the taste of a classic car. Not the wheels so much, but freshly washed windscreens? Can't be beat.

Doodling

Sadly my artistic ability hasn't improved since I was 12, but you know what? At that age I was considered very good at art, which IS something. Sure I mainly doodle my initials nowadays which is clearly narcissistic, BUT I also like to draw squiggles and various medieval weapons.

Oh great, my internet is back. Even so, let's think up more hobbies for myself. (Ok, ok, I am getting some WORDS from the internet to help me. But you'll soon see they're not bringing to mind common fun things to do, to say the least).

Eel farming

Watching eels all day may sound boring to you, but when I was in an eel farm the atmosphere was electric. I felt a fair amount of discomfort and even paralysation when I dived in the water with the things and making things worse, I can't even swim, but still... mostly a great time.

Flower sniffing

A tough hobby to admit you're into, that's for sure. Then again, bees sting and bees love flowers. Bees are badass, so flower sniffers are too. :)

Gardening

More manly than flower sniffing, but really gardening is only fun in the right weather. In my opinion, that's in April, May, and March if you're lucky.

Hexagon collecting

This one is plain weird. Not as weird as someone who collects shapes with 666 sides though, which would be alarming. Making things even creepier is the fact such shapes basically look like circles, so you wouldn't even know if you saw one. Subconsciously, however? Different story. Maybe.

Igloo building

Sadly igloo building is next to impossible in England, so igloo fanatics will have to get most of their excitement through special magazines, and even they are hard to get hold of. In fact, they may not even exist. I don't mean to sound offensive, but in my opinion, they shouldn't exist.

Joke writing

Not all the jokes I write are good admittedly, but even my worst ones do kind of make sense with only a bit of explanation. Having said that, some of my gags are so bad they will never see the light of day. They are stored on my computer for morbid curiosity alone. Much like the small pox virus.

Kipper rescuing

This is a particularly rewarding hobby, though it is best avoided if you're feeling hungry. Otherwise you will be making the situation worse.

Laboratory trespassing

A great activity for the curious, but it's SO illegal. Don't worry, I've never done it in my life, but if I ever see an unoccupied lab at night, with the door open? Maybe I couldn't resist... :S

Macing

A very cruel hobby, but in the right circumstances, it could save your life. Don't own any mace? Don't worry, you can put some chilli sauce on a stick and jab someone in the eye. Wait, that's assault isn't it? Still fun, though.

Neptune gazing

Sometimes people aren't interested in anything in space apart from Neptune. It totally makes sense, as it's the furthest planet away from the sun, now that Pluto isn't a planet anymore. Back in the day, Pluto gazing was really popular, I'm sure. I'm just saying it was a record holder. :O

Orange rapping

Rapping about oranges is notoriously difficult as nothing rhymes with them. I'm indifferent to a lot of rap music, but if you can pull off orange rap you have my genuine respect.

Pea shooting

Sometimes you want to attack someone without the risk of going to jail. What is someone going to say? 'Someone fired a pea at me'? Having said that, never fire ANYTHING at the police or the military. :S

Queue riding

The dullest hobby on the list by far. Even so, I know a fair bit about it. To pass the time, you may want to do what those in the know call a 'double hobby'. For example, you can play games on your mobile phone whilst Q riding. Always live your life to the max!!

Rambling

Ah, a more traditional hobby. No, I'm not talking about tramps having a mental breakdown, I mean going for long walks. You have every right to talk gibberish if it makes you feel better, but that's hobby you want to keep secret at all costs.

Simon appreciating

I like this one. It never really happens, but I do like the thought of it.

Tree hugging

I don't think I've ever HUGGED a tree, but I do like the things. Here's a thought: Rock climbing is dangerous (without equipment), tree climbing is dangerous. So why is it if I want to climb a tree, people would look at me like I was a freak? How is that fair? >:(When I was about 13 or 14, I suggested to my friend he should climb a tree with me, but he clearly wasn't interested. The way he looked at me haunts me to this day.

Uncle mocking

We all know my uncle has achieved more in his life than most people could dream of, but I still haven't forgiven him for throwing a small object at me.

Viper running

See a viper? Run for it! Very exciting. But that's coming from me, someone who's basically never seen a venomous snake in his life. (Though I did see an adder in Chobham).

Wasp investigating

People aren't the only animals that break the law, you know? Keep your eyes peeled for outlaw wasps, before they get you. Will they mug you, extort you, or steal your car? Who knows?

Xylophone playing

A weird letter, a normal thing to do. Beneficial, even. A funny world, right?

Zoo visiting

Another weird letter and normal thing to do. Two in a row, very cool. However, the first time I remember visiting a zoo, it was too hot, I was slightly ill, AND I was with a teacher. Jeez. -_-

Whoops, I missed Y. Yogurt eating. There you go. Self-explanatory.

That's 26 fun things to do for you! You know what? I'm glad my internet wasn't working earlier. It forced me to think for myself and reap the rewards. Great stuff. You don't think a 14 year old wanting to climb a tree was odd, do you? It really has stayed with me. Hm. Anywho... bye!
