

Today, I'll be reviewing 'Supernatural' by Santana! Change just one letter, and you get 'Supernatural' by Satana. Talk about a ruined gig, no one wants to hear black metal music in a chilled out Latin American concert. Changing one letter again, you get SuperNAPural, which is music so chilled out, it puts you to sleep. Would that work, or would it be too extreme? These are questions people who rush their writings must ask themselves. Another mistake would be 'SuperPAPural', which is music for the ultimate dad. If you change two letters, you get Super Pap Mural, which is the best art ever for a dad. Could work, I suppose. Changing letters doesn't just produce some rather undesirable results in band and album names, you know? It 'works' for whole genres, too. Change just two letters of Latin rock and you get Satan rock. Supernatural by Satana, the Satan rock band. Again, I'm just saying be careful, it's damn important.

Wikipedia says album track 'Love of My Life' is based on Brahms' 'Symphony No.3 in F Major'. There is a part of me (pretty big) that wants to say something in the Youtube comments section of the song like 'You know... in many ways I'm reminded of Brahms' 3rd Symphony in F Major.' There is no way for people to know I simply visited Wikipedia and that because of chronic mental health conditions, don't always act in a way most consider normal. Unless they see my username 'PalindromeLife4Real'. What does it mean? Probably nothing. Only joking, that isn't my username, but it's certainly an idea for a future name. Have I mentioned that name before? If so, it shows how seriously I take it. Having just listened to the Santana song, I have to say I never knew the classical composer wrote such funky music. Similarly, I could say on the Youtube page for Brahms something like 'Wow, I'm reminded of Santana.' Then I could say Brahms was clearly influenced by him. I'm sure I would get lots of angry reactions calling me an idiot, but still more polite and sophisticated angry reactions than most of the population.

For whatever reason, the internet says that 'Love of My Life' was written by Santana and Matthews. What about Brahms?? Wasn't he mentioned because he's a classical composer many have forgotten about? If so, Santana would be even worse than me if I went on Youtube and talked about a subject I didn't even know about. At least I never said I wrote the song, Santana is just a troll! What's he going to do next, claim he wrote 'Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star'?? Maybe he could say he inspired Bach? I mean if Santana is 'supernatural' as he claims, maybe he can travel time and inspire people who were born hundreds of years before him. I think Santana can bend spoons with the power of his mind, too. Song 'The Calling' has a chord progression that reminds me of the James Bond theme, the difference being the Santana singer keeps saying 'Freedom!' It works because the fictional spy fights for freedom. It would be a dark collection of stories if Bond was on the side of evil and if he was the one who built and set up weapons in space that could blow the Earth up! How is that likeable? I'd be like 'I don't care how you like martinis, you're a scumbag!'

You know what would be REALLY scary? A supernatural Santana that can travel time and steal ideas, but he's the evil version, Satana. You have to wonder why anyone would travel across space and time, making things worse for everybody, especially someone so apparently normal with lots of caring friends and family, but that's the thing with Satan, he's very, very bad. Lightening things up a little, nice album! Very soulful and surely what the devil fears. You know what else he hates? People being friendly, donating albums to charity shops where people like me can buy them for just 50p! And that happened! Sadly however, me buying such an album for such a little amount of money is greed technically speaking, making the devil happy. Sorry about that, it wasn't intentional, believe me. Let me make things right by giving the album the respectable score of 8.75/10. Oh no, I have to make things worse again, I'm afraid, I've definitely practiced gluttony recently, too and I suppose some of my character's actions can be described as 'variance', (in other words hostile and asshole-like). BUT other than that? Nothing to worry about, I think. And.... bye!
