Ben: Hello, listeners! Would you like to start things off with another apology, James?

James: No…

Ben: It really is in your best interests if you do.

James: I did nothing wrong!

Ben: Yes you did, you were abusive to a potential employer…

James: That was a misunderstanding! Yes, calling someone's parents 'Satanists' would be considered abusive in most situations as the devil, and I quote Alan Partridge is 'an evil, evil idiot' in fact I'd take that even further, but I was simply spreading my wisdom!

Ben: What's that mean?

James: The person who complained was called Helen as you know, Ben. I said the name meant 'from Hell' and things went down from there.

Dan: The police were called for that reason alone?

James: I showed her some of the music I composed for her and things went down from there.

Dan: How?

James: First up, the music I wrote was in a genre called 'goregrind' which isn't very popular because of the fart noises from the vocalist of course.

Dan: Of course…

James: I was soon told to leave which surprised me. I refused to do so because I did nothing wrong and then I accused Helen of planning to set fire to my car through the power of evil.

Dan: Did things go down from there?

James: Yes, the police were called…

Dan: And did things go down from there?

James: I'm here explaining what happened which is very embarrassing as I want people to look up to me.

Ben: Can you imagine being stuck in a room with someone like you?

James: Yes, but Simon Wiedemann is from another dimension…

Ben: He does pop up around here every now and then though, no one really knows how he does it…

James: I heard he's just really good at physics. I'd love to meet him. He really is the only person I can think of who I can't picture getting me arrested…

Dan: Why goregrind, James?

James: Even in school food tech lessons I was told to make food that stood out and that was different, but when I did that I still failed with my pizza that I made! The same thing is happening all over again, just with music…

Ben: How did your pizza stand out?

James: It was absolutely disgusting.

Ben: And your music was disgusting too?

James: I'd say more chilling than disgusting. No actually you're right, it was pretty messed up.

Dan: Do you believe music should be like food?

James: I believe music IS food.

Dan: How so?

James: You get nice food, you get nice music, you get spicy food, you get spicy music, etc., etc. and I wrote some damn spicy music.

Dan: It seems to me like you were failed by your old food tech teacher when they gave you advice. Did you get along with him or her?

James: Not at all.

Dan: And all these years later… payback.

James: Yeah well she had to eat some of my pizza, so there.

Ben: Did you get along with your physics teacher?

James: I have to be honest, I didn't really get along with any teachers. My English teacher was an exception, not because I was good at the subject, but because he had a reputation of scaring the other children.

Ben: Ok. I'm just bringing up physics, because maybe you could visit Simon Wiedemann's world. And stay there.

James: I wouldn't know how. I'm guessing I'd have to do something very strange, otherwise everyone would be able to shift dimensions. Maybe I could jump up and down whilst spinning around?

Dan: Yes, do that now.

(Jumping noises are heard)

James: Nope. Didn't work. I can levitate though and I think that's pretty neat.

Ben: That is impressive, I'm not just saying that…

James: Thank you.

Ben: Now jump into another dimension, I believe in you…

James: You know where I'd really like to go?

Ben: Where?

James: I miss pizzas. I want to eat safe ones again… from somewhere…

Ben: Oh the pizzas in Simon's universe are SO safe. Pizzafication really is unheard of there. So much so, you can actually get sent to a mental home if you suggest eating pizzas makes you turn into one!

James: It really is a utopia.

Ben: Even so, pizzas aren't considered health foods over there.

Dan: Oh if only they knew what REALLY unhealthy pizzas are like.

Ben: Exactly.

James: Some people see unhealthy foods as causing weight problems, the people in this studio associate the world 'unhealthy' with unspeakable suffering.

Ben: Anyway, are you going to give up on your music career?

James: I might stop showing my work to potential employers…

Ben: And by employers, you mean people who work in care?

James: Stuff like that, yeah. People get told to write their hobbies on CVs, but yeah, I think I'll leave music out of it. I'm actually doubting that I should show my music to other musicians… At least some musicians, anyway.

Ben: What??? No! Why??

James: The face Helen pulled at me…

Ben: She was probably just confused, that's all.

James: Oh, you wouldn't believe the amount of times she said she was confused…

Ben: There you go! Deep down, she was probably really impressed! I can genuinely see your music on the news! It would be like 'News just in' then your music would be like 'Thbptttttt!!!!' and everyone would love it!

James: Really??

Ben: They'd think it was the greatest thing ever.

James: Huh. I actually have a CD of my music on me right now, if you want to have a listen?

Ben: Oh James, I'd love to I really would, but the show is almost over!

James: There's still a few seconds…

Dan: No we have to end the show a few seconds early.

James: Why?

Dan: Just do.

James: But we're still broadcasting, right now… I can easily fit at least some of my music in, right?

Dan: James, get off me!

(James's music is heard)

Dan: Stop! Stop! Get the music out of the player, Ben!

Ben: Oh God this music is terrible!
