

Simon: Hello! Any more random ideas you have on your mind?

Simon: Are you kidding?

Simon: Why ARE you so random?

Simon: I don't know...

Simon: I mean now you're on medication, surely you should be thinking reasonably clearly...

Simon: I guess not.

Simon: What were you like before the meds??

Simon: Very random?

Simon: Touche. So what not-quite-so-random-any-more thoughts have you got for me?

Simon: I heard 'salt and lychee cola' as 'salt and leech cola'. Yuck.

Simon: Great! Keep them coming!

Simon: I think I heard somewhere that the old computer game 'Quake' used loads of shades of the same colour (brown) to create large varieties of light. However, as there were memory limitations, more colours couldn't have been used...

Simon: And?

Simon: Imagine advertising for the game. It would be like 'Quake: 256 colours, and all of them are brown'.

Simon: Was that true?

Simon: Not sure.

Simon: Next!

Simon: Why do rappers always say 'peace' so aggressively?

Simon: I don't know.

Simon: It doesn't make sense.

Simon: Next!!

Simon: Why are Youtube music reaction videos almost always positive? Why can't people be honest and say some music sucks?

Simon: Because people get offended?

Simon: Right. Diehard or even everyday fans literally can't take it. It drives them nuts.

Simon: They need to grow up.

Simon: Yes. And that's coming from ME.

Simon: Nexterooo...

Simon: I remember talking to my first psychiatrist, and I said something like 'I found my trip to Spain depressing'. She asked why, and I said something like 'I didn't like the green trees.' She looked at me like I was the weirdest person in the world and said 'You didn't like Spain because the trees were green???' Then I explained they were a duller colour than English ones. She did understand that, believe it or not, she commented that the Spanish scenery is a lot dryer or whatever. Phew. Green trees troubling people would be a medical emergency.

Simon: Nexteroonio!

Simon: One of my Facebook friends showed me some guy showing off his perfect pitch. (The ability to recognise the twelve notes of the chromatic scale by ear). As a joke, I told him the guy was just making the names of the notes up and my friend believed me, lolz. To be fair though, hardly anyone would be able to tell if he was faking or not.

Simon: Meheheh. How did he react when he found out you were joking?

Simon: He showed me an unimpressed face.

Simon: Meheh. Fancy answering some questions?

Simon: Sure...

Simon: What did your school teachers think you'd end up being?

Simon: Hobo.

Simon: And what did the school computers and their digital questionnaires think the job most suited to you would be?

Simon: Security guard. A bit weird, but I DO like the thought of doing nothing but sitting around all day. In hindsight, I think the computer was implying doing zilch was all I really could do.

Simon: How have you been enjoying things since freedom day?

Simon: I can't say I've really noticed any more freedoms. People are still encouraged to wear masks, but two more hiking machines are available at the gym, and one more rowing machine. (Yes that's all, in the working out area, at least). I will however be going into London next week (unless I'm ill which would really suck), but I was allowed to go there last July or August or whatever, so again, I haven't seen any massive changes. I guess I could go to a nightclub if I felt the need, but I've never really wanted to. And what if I got lost trying to find the place? Cool people go to nightclubs. Getting lost isn't cool. Especially when you need to ask an old lady for help.

Simon: Has the price of the local kebabs gone down now that the cooks have no excuse to say 'We need the extra money'?

Simon: No. I bet the fast food place hates the new freedoms. I bet they're doing everything in their power to make it seem like everyone is being sick. I noticed no one wore masks, there. What does that tell you?

Simon: What?

Simon: They want a new wave of Coronavirus.

Simon: Ok...

Simon: Right. Papa John's never increased their prices, because they're infallible. They don't advertise themselves as God-like, but I guess they don't need to. I've never really seen many Papa John's adverts, so I don't know... Maybe they do say they're infallible. If the kebab place said they know everything and can't do any wrong, I'd be much more annoyed. You know who really would be funny saying they're perfect? Haribo. As in 'Kids and grown ups love it so, now get on your knees and worship me'. That's me taking things to the extreme.

Simon: I've noticed you've rambled a lot in this interview. Why do you think that could be?

Simon: I don't know. You don't think I've been weird, do you?

Simon: I wouldn't worry about it. You've always been this way.

Simon: I think I ramble because I don't know what else to say. I could try sounding thoughtful, but I'm not sure if I could pull it off.

Simon: Ah.

Simon: :)

Simon: Anything else on your mind?

Simon: Nope.

Simon: Byeeeee.