

Today, I'll be picking random places from Google Maps and ranking how nice they are! I was going to rank random words again, but have I done that too much? Hopefully not, because I THINK I'll do that tomorrow. I'm just feeling a bit tired of writing right now, and the thought of getting material from an online random word generator in such a straightforward way is a comforting one. Remember the Dominant Egg came from such a generator, and he's a really big star now and I wish him well. I hear he's in rehab and doing great. So yeah, don't knock such tools! But I tried at least a little bit harder today, with the slightly new idea. Let's go!

10th: A332 Slough

Slough has a reputation for being miserable, but the buildings here actually look pretty stylish. What would a miserable building look like? Well, I've never seen a house in the shape of a frown, but I do find that concrete buildings look depressing. A concrete building in the shape of a frown would make me paranoid. What are you trying to convey? But again, actually this place looks fairly decent. I have to be honest, these rankings are in no particular order at the end of the day. I'm just feelin' tired.

9th: Merton St, Banbury

Did you know Paul Merton used to be called Paul Martin? Well, Merton St was once Martin street, but the comedian changed his name, and the street did too. If the TV personality wants towns to stop stealing his identity, that should be respected. No, only joking, that didn't really happen. As far as I know, anyway. You know Merton's co-star Ian Hislop? Well, there is indeed a Hislop Road in Rugeley. Sadly for him, it's not as populated. I guess he just doesn't have as many fans. :(

8th: 3 Woodmansterne Ln, Wallington

A very long, straight road here which is disappointing. There is a mix of single yellow and double yellow lines, which I guess is double the fun for those who don't like cars that hang around, but for everyone else? Hm. The houses look nice, though. I'm assuming Woodmansterne is a cross between a woodman/carpenter and a morgenstern which is a medieval weapon. As I've never seen a carpenter used as a weapon, I guess in this case it's a carpenter WITH a weapon, which is still frightening. For that reason too, this place is low on the list.

7th: 100 Hydean Way, Stevenage

Ah, the age of Steven. The place where all the men are called 'Steve' and the women are almost called Steven, but not quite. (Stephanie). Again, a very long and straight road, but this time there are white zigzags on it. Maybe they're there to tell road users what to do, maybe they're there for the sake of variety. In a place where everyone is called Steven, it is what the place needs. As long as people aren't crashing their cars, who cares, right? I'm sure no one will as the markings at least seem to be clear and logical. If the speed limits were 100 mph for the sake of variety, that's too far.

6th: Chambers Way, Biggleswade

The way of the chamber. Martial arts for chambers/large rooms, basically. I'm just saying 'Way of the Dragon' was a martial arts film and, well you can work out the rest. Why would rooms need to fight? Vandals. I can't see any fighting rooms here, but rooms are indoors not outside, so I'm stuck. I think Google Maps inside houses would be too much of a privacy violation so only the lucky few will ever see a hall do a kick, for example.

5th: Lowbell Ln, London Colney

A nice and functional car park here, but not ostentatious. Impressed, so far. The road has 'slow' written on it, which is a bit vague, though. I'm just saying 100 mph is pretty slow for a plane but not a car. Then again, it's exceptionally rare for a small plane to land on a road designed only for motorbikes, etc., so let's not overcomplicate things I guess. If a jumbo jet tries to land on the road? May God help us all. Want my advice? Aim for the car park. There's at least some room there, and it's kind of a funny image, too. It's just that such a plane in such a place could suggest someone out there - who you'd expect to be highly intelligent - thinks car parks are for planes, which is ridiculous, isn't it?

4th: 2 Castle Cir, Kendal

Nice, old style houses which is nice, but no castle. The road is kind of circular (or 'cir'), though. My other criticism? No Kendal mint cake, either. Not left on the road, anyway. I do see someone walking with a baby in a pram and it's possible there is some of the cake in the thing, but if so, a bit cheeky there. Really it should be eating baby food. If not, that's going to be one hyperactive baby. On the plus side, it would be fitting.

3rd: 5 Elstow Rd, Bedford

What do you get when you cross a bed with a car? Bedford! Ok, ok, this place wanted chosen at random, I wanted to make a joke. Not hilarious, but if you're ever in the area, say it to make the locals warm to you. Good clean fun. I like the bright orange petrol station in the area, too. Who knew fuelling your car could be so wacky??

2nd: 42 Main St, Coddington

A lovely looking area spoiled by a grumpy looking man outside a pub, with his arms folded. A person nearby seems to have a funny way of walking, possibly because he got assaulted by the grumpy man. A man in a wheelchair is also seen. Was he put in such a chair by the grumpy man? If so, it's a rampage. A no go area. But again, looks nice.

1st: 236 Windsor Ln, Burnham

As Stevenage is filled with Stevens, you'd expect to see at least one barbecue in burnt ham I mean Burnham. Nope. It's a lovely area, though. Obviously it would be better if the place was called 'Cookedham' as burnt food doesn't taste as nice, but rather burn something than undercook it, right? You know a place I wouldn't want to visit? Rawham. I have eaten a raw sausage though, when I asked my nan for one. She didn't let me eat too many biscuits though. That's the kind of person she was.

Right! If you live in any of the places I mentioned, sorry for calling you 'random', 'miserable', or 'identity thieves', or even someone who physically attacks other people in a rampage, but I didn't really mean it! Happy now? Great, bye!
