

Hello, this time I would like to say sorry for saying Italians were obsessed with pasta and Ferraris, Spaniards were overly preoccupied with tapas and sombreros, and sorry for trying to make the stereotype that Germans are morbid. In my defence, Rammstein lyrics are dark, but the American band Cannibal Corpse have darker lyrics and there is no stereotype that people from the USA torture and kill everyone. If that were true, no one would go to Disneyland! A land of magic and wonder? Err... not really. Mickey Mouse locking the visitors in concrete cells with nothing in them other than a smiling Donald Duck? Where's the fun, there? If the country is too corrupt to do anything about that, surely other countries would step in. I'd take part in protests, but only really because I'd actually quite like to go to Disneyland one day. Not on my own, but with someone much younger than me? Sure. I'd look less like a child and more like a responsible adult. Nope, I'd likely be more excited than the youngster. 'Look at that, it's just like in the cartoons, but real! Let's look at him whilst riding on rollercoasters at incredible speeds, what a sensory overload! :D' You can think of worse stereotypes for Italians, though. I may not be obsessed with pasta but of course I actually am obsessed with pizza. For a short while, Pizza Hut was considering changing their name to Pasta Hut and if they succeeded in calling pizzas 'pasta', then I would indeed be obsessed with pasta.

If it were true that Americans ARE all serial killers, I could always go to Disneyland Paris, right? No, they're all obsessed with cheese and baguettes. It would be annoying, especially as I don't even like cheese. 'Would you like some cheese, Simon?' 'Would you like some cheese, Simon?' For the last time, no! A little bit of bread though, maybe. Fine. I'm just saying everyone has their breaking point and if my frustrations weren't taken seriously and a Frenchman didn't say 'sorry' but instead preceded to put a necklace with garlic attached to it over my head, I don't think I would react rationally. And now of course I have to apologise to France, don't I? Sorry! I read that Germans find the French accent funny which I guess is understandable as the accents are so different and everything the French say sounds like love poetry, but everyone else finds the German accent funny as it comes across as so harsh, aggressive, kinda mental tbh, and maybe even morbid. Like everyone there sings about growing babies in laboratories and how the unloved babies later commit crimes because of a deep rooted anger. And once again, sorry Germany. Yes, a German band once sang about a grown baby ended up wanting to kill people, but that is very far from a German stereotype! It's never even happened! And even if it does happen, the baby ends up killing because of mental problems NOT because it's German, let's make that very clear.

Now I'll apologise for saying how easy it is to be made king of Spain and Italy. I mean I made it sound reeeally easy. If it really were that simple, something would be seriously amiss in the countries, obviously. Wow, people get approached randomly and made almighty rulers, and I am random as my only qualifications are a 2:2 in composing for film and TV. This is an apology in advance, but I've been thinking of doing another April Fools post next year about me being made king of Poland and you guessed it, I'm going to get the public on my side by distributing pierogi (dumplings) and vodka. The surprise will be spoilt, but it's better I explain how I'm joking about that claim as soon as possible. You don't want to upset Polish people because they're all drunk and aggressive, especially after being described as so simple. Woooooooooooooah, I crossed a line there, didn't I? I didn't mean it, I swear!! Yes, yes, yes, I could simply just delete my prior comments but after Googling 'are Polish people forgiving' and getting told they are 'capable of deep forgiveness' (the best kind of forgiveness :)), I decided not to. Sorry. It's interesting how I've never blogged about me becoming king of England, the most likely reason being wherever I go, I get a certain reputation. The UK simply won't be having it, which is sad. Imagine people singing 'God save the king' when referring to me, though! :O And on that cool note, bye!