

There comes a time in a writer's life, where he has to admit defeat. His only options are to use the craziest concepts in the world ever, self-plagiarise (arguably bad ideas) and be exceptionally ignorant, OR to delete his efforts for good. For better or for worse, I chose the former. I'm not proud of the following material, but composing it was better than laying in bed and crying about lockdown. (However, I'm sure I will recover from my creative slump!) Here goes!!!!

City of Evil, by Avenged Sevenfold. You'd think a whole city of evil times by seven would be REALLY evil, wouldn't you? If anything, the band sound relatively upbeat and cheerful for the most part. No really, check them out. I don't want you to think I think the most demented music in the world sounds like The Spice Girls or whatever as I look pretty wacky already. No, no. In a way you could call the band the Spice Girls of metal. No only joking. I'm sure they'd HATE that idea. But they sound really brutal and powerful at least, right? I guess in a way, but the drums are often quite weedy. (Get ready, because the following is particularly dumb. Sorry. Best I could do). Maybe the band made a mistake and intended to call the album 'City of Weevils'. (Yeah, it gets worse). But that would be a particularly huge error that must have continued for several months during the making of the release. A7X aren't morons are they? It would be like me coming up with a book I want to call 'One Screwy Year', but somehow I kept calling it 'One Screwy Beer'. Thousands and thousands of times in fact, along with all other people working on it. Doesn't sound right, does it? (Ok, silliness is all over now).

On the plus side, if A7X did in fact do the biggest cockup of all time, (oh maybe it's not over) it would make an interesting fact. It could be in the next Guinness Book of World Records. In the end, the possible cockup probably worked out for the band as City of Weevils sounds pretty stupid, if descriptive. It's just not metal. Taking things even further, (oh dear God) maybe the group have repeatedly made a MEGA cockup with their very band name, and really wanted to call themselves 'Happy All the Time'. Sounds almost unbelievable, doesn't it? Well, reality is stranger than fiction. Maybe they just keep falling into old habits by calling themselves the arguably cooler name. No... That couldn't have happened. I hope it did, though. If so, I'd personally start the Guinness Book of World Records with that bit of info. But to be clear, it sounds a bit nuts. (Alright, NOW I'll abandon all the crazy theories. Thing is, I can't. No. I have to try).

Maybe A7X meant to call themselves 'Eh??? 7X'. As in 'Eh times 7.' THAT is logical. If so, I'm glad they're almost as baffled as I am. Don't know what the avenged is all about in the longer form of the name though. Or maybe they wanted to call themselves 'Eh 7 Ex', as in they USED to be eh times 7. Do you think I LIKE writing this review? No I do not. And I've still got loads to do. I've just watched a Youtube video, hoping the break would help me. It didn't. I don't want to moan, and I know someone observing me would call my professionalism into question, but saying I don't know what to write over and over again, kind of upped the word count of previous articles, too. And you know what? No one complained. Of course, maybe no one cared enough to get back to me, but let's just call this style of writing 'daring'. And it is daring. I'm daring enough to make myself sound like a prick.

Ok! That's City of Evil reviewed for you! I hope you liked it. Personally, I thought the critique was (expletive). Still four short paragraphs? Not bad. Rather worryingly however, I won't have an excuse to take a break from 'comedy' writing for a few days, now, where I will be proof reading people's music reviews and THEN reviewing albums for myself. What do I think of the album in question? I mean it's alright, technically speaking, but I can't say I enjoy listening to it very much. I don't know why. I guess that fits in with the article's theme of cluelessness if general, right? :D Teeheehee. Excellent stuff. Let's be objective and give it 7.5/10. Byebye.
